Counting the economic cost of poll protests

BY BRIAN NGUGI

Businesspeople and economic analysts are united in their warning that the current political stalemate will have far-reaching consequences on the economy, which is expected to grow six per cent in the 2016/2017 financial year. The weekly protests against the electoral commission are already exacting a heavy toll on the business climate. The Kenya Private Sector Alliance (epsa) says traders are losing in the region of Sh80 million every day.

It (Kuria's utterances) is wrong and that's why we have launched the probe to get to the bottom of it. We have the video, which we are reviewing for action," — IG Bolinnet

By STANDARD TEAM

The country's hate-speech and incitement watchdogs yesterday summoned six MPs over inflammatory remarks.

The authorities were firm that unchecked political rhetoric would spark violence ahead of the next General Election.

Those caught in the net of Inspector General of Police Joseph Bolinnet and the chairman of the National Cohesion and Integration Commission,

Ray of hope as Jubilee answers Raila team on IEBC

By WILFRED AYAGA and JACOB NG'ETICH

The ruling coalition and the Opposition yesterday moved closer to a deal on electoral reform talks after Jubilee softened its stand on some of CORD's demands.

However, some legislators from Jubilee said they will reject any proposal to change the Constitution. Even as the politicians worked to bridge the gap between the coalitions, the chairman of the electoral commission Is-sack Hassan yesterday said that he was ready to accept any political settlement (see separate story).

The Standard can reveal that the
