Dear Counsel,

The Presiding Judge advises that it is sufficient to print extracts of lengthy documents, as long as the preceding/subsequent pages provide sufficient context. The Presiding Judges preserves his right to deviate from this direction, should specific circumstances so require.

Kind regards, TC V

Dear Trial Chamber V,

The Defence understands that when a specific extract is being used by the parties during a witness's testimony the Chamber prefers having the entirety of the document at its disposal in the binder.

The Defence will abide by the Chamber's request and preference. However, when lengthy documents are being used, such as Facebook extracts which sometimes go up to 600 pages, would the Chamber still require the entirety of the document in its hardcopy binder? Or would the Chamber prefer having the extract along with 10 or more preceding/subsequent pages for sufficient context?

Kind regards,
Mylène Dimitri
