A. INTRODUCTION

1. Prosecution witness P-317, a UN human rights investigator, testified that Ngudjolo admitted to her that he had organized the Bogoro attack on 24 February 2003. Ngudjolo denied having made that statement and testified that he never met witness P-317. The Trial Chamber found P-317 to be credible and thus accepted that Ngudjolo admitted to her that he had organized the attack. But it declined to accept his confession as proof of guilt, among others, because it found it “possible” that Ngudjolo had falsely confessed to her in order to bolster his reputation in the Congolese army. This wholly speculative and factually unsupported finding – contrary even to the testimony of Ngudjolo himself -- illustrates the Chamber’s flawed approach to the evidence that, ultimately, led it to acquit Ngudjolo.
2. The Prosecution recognizes that credibility determinations are largely left to the fact-finder and should not lightly be reconsidered on appeal. It also recognizes that these determinations are intrinsically interwoven with the requirement that criminal charges be proven beyond reasonable doubt, and that a Chamber may entertain reasonable doubt if it has legitimate reason to question the credibility of Prosecution witnesses as to material facts. However, the Chamber is also obligated to interpret and apply the “beyond reasonable doubt” standard under article 66 of the Statute in a reasonable way; the standard does not require proof beyond any doubt and does not require that the Chamber search for and then reject all hypothetically possible contrary inferences, however unrealistic or unsupported, before it can declare itself satisfied that the Accused is responsible for the crimes charged. In this case, the Chamber applied an impossible standard. As illustrated by its analysis of P-317’s evidence, the Chamber was reluctant to consider evidence as probative of guilt without first rejecting all potential contrary explanations, regardless whether those explanations were supported by the record or could be reached by resorting to reason, logic or common sense. As a consequence, when analysing incriminating evidence, the Chamber refused to draw conclusions adverse to the accused, even if those were the only reasonable conclusions established by the record.

3. Second, this appeal concerns the duty of a Trial Chamber to consider the totality of the evidentiary record when issuing a judgment pursuant to article 74. In this case, the Chamber carried out a compartmentalized and selective analysis of the evidence, viewing pieces of evidence in isolation, ignoring critical corroborative evidence and relevant factual findings made by the Chamber in the same Judgment. When evidence was consistent with other evidence, its credibility was questioned on the ground that the consistency could have resulted from collusion.
4. [REDACTED].
5. All these are serious errors that invalidate the Judgment, and as such they require remedial action by the Appeals Chamber. It is critical to the proper fulfilment of the Court's mandate that Trial Chambers apply article 66 correctly, and refrain from reaching factual conclusions on the basis of speculative hypotheses that are not supported by the trial record and are contrary to logic and common sense. It is also critical that Trial Chambers enter judgments that take into account and reflect the totality of the evidence, not piecemeal and unconnected analyses of discrete items. [REDACTED]. All these are, in the Prosecution's submission, additional and compelling reasons warranting reversal by the Appeals Chamber.
6. Pursuant to Regulation 23*bis* of the Regulations of the Court, the Prosecution files this document confidentially, ex-parte, Prosecution and Defence of Ngudjolo only, because it refers, in particular under the Third Ground of Appeal, to information that is subject to the same classification. In addition, it refers to details of protected witnesses that are not in the public domain. The Prosecution will file a public redacted version of this document as soon as practicable.

B. STATEMENT OF FACTS

7. Mathieu Ngudjolo Chui (“Ngudjolo”) and co-accused Germain Katanga (“Katanga”) were charged with the crimes against humanity of murder, rape and sexual slavery, and the war crimes of wilful killing, intentionally directing an attack against a civilian population, rape, sexual slavery, destruction and pillaging of property, and using children under the age of 15 years to participate actively in hostilities.¹ The charges arose from an attack on 24 February 2003 on the village of Bogoro, Ituri, in the Orientale Province of the Democratic Republic of the Congo (“DRC”), which was part of a broader armed conflict in Ituri between, inter alia, Lendu and Ngiti militias, who fought the Union des Patriotes Congolais (“UPC”), a militia predominantly composed of members of the Hema community and led by Thomas Lubanga. The Prosecution alleged at trial that Ngudjolo was head of the Lendu militia of Bedu-Ezekere groupement (also more generally referred to at trial as FNI, though the Prosecution did not assert that Ngudjolo was the leader of the whole of the ‘FNI’)² and Katanga headed the Ngiti militia of Walendu-Bindi collectivité (referred to generally as the FRPI).

The Prosecution Case

8. The Prosecution’s evidence with respect to Ngudjolo’s role in the Bogoro attack was based on witnesses and pieces of evidence, the most important individual

¹ There was a single joined trial. Shortly before the Ngudjolo judgment was handed down, the cases against the two accused were severed and the Trial Chamber gave notice of an intention with respect to Katanga to recharacterize the mode of liability. Issues relating to that notice are currently pending on appeal.

components of which were P-250, P-279, P-280 from within the Bedu-Ezekere militia group; witnesses P-28, P-219 who were present in the neighbouring Walendu-Bindi collectivité at the time; the testimony of P-317, that Ngudjolo told her that he had organised those the attacks on Bogoro and Mandro; and the “Soap Letter”, a contemporaneous document that corroborates some of the evidence of the witnesses referred to above.

9. Centrally located at road junctions, Bogoro was a civilian and primarily Hema village that, in February 2003, also housed a UPC camp.³ The Prosecution alleged that, following UPC attacks against the Ngiti and Lendu, Ngudjolo and Katanga devised a common plan to eliminate without distinction the UPC and Hema presence in Bogoro and destroy the village. In the weeks preceding the attack, Ngudjolo and Katanga communicated directly and through emissaries, defined the directions of their attacks, and distributed weapons and ammunition. Finally, they moved their troops to jointly surround Bogoro on 23 February, as agreed.
10. The attack on Bogoro began before dawn on 24 February. Hundreds of combatants from the Bedu-Ezekere and FRPI militias overran the village, pillaging and setting houses – and their occupants – on fire. They also blocked the exit routes from Bogoro and killed civilians without distinction. Those who had sought refuge in the Bogoro Institute, a former school building in the centre of the UPC camp within the village, were massacred with machetes or gunshots. More than 200 civilian victims perished in the attack, including women who were killed because of their Hema origins. Other women, when captured, concealed that they were Hemas; though allowed to live, they were raped, forced to “marry” persons in the attacking militias or made to act as sex slaves for the soldiers.⁴

11. Later that same day, once Bogoro was under their control, Ngudjolo and Katanga and their subordinates celebrated their victory under the mango trees in the village centre, amid the corpses of women, children and the elderly. During and after the leaders’ celebration, attackers continued to hunt down, capture, and kill civilian occupants of Bogoro.
12. Approximately six weeks after the Bogoro attack, Ngudjolo admitted to a UN worker, P-317, that he had organized the attack on Bogoro (and another attack a week later at Mandro) for strategic reasons. In response to P-317’s question about the murders of civilians in the village, Ngudjolo said that there were “no Hema civilians” and that they were all armed, suggesting that all the victims, including women and children were legitimate targets. Ngudjolo also told Prosecution witness P-219, sometime after the Bogoro attack, that Katanga had prompted the battle in Bogoro but could not have won it without Ngudjolo’s help.
13. Within days after the 24 February Bogoro attack, the Bedu-Ezekere and FRPI forces engaged in other battles in the vicinity: on 4 March at Mandro and on 6 March at Bunia. Ngudjolo admitted to P-317 that he organized the attack on Mandro and he admitted to a Congolese public prosecutor that he led the attack on Bunia. Several defence witnesses (D03-88, D03-P-66; D03-P-44) confirmed that Ngudjolo took part in the Bunia attack on 6 March and in several video and audio recordings made in March 2003, Ngudjolo held himself out as a military leader including of the Lendu of Djugu (in which Bedu-Ezekere is located).

Other persons seen and heard in the same recordings treated Ngudjolo with deference characteristic of that given to a militia leader and Ngudjolo himself asserted his leadership when referring to another FRPI commander. In subsequent peace negotiations Ngudjolo also acted on behalf of the FRPI and FNI.

14. Several witnesses also testified to the presence of child soldiers in Zumbe and Aveba in the period following the attack on Bogoro.
15. The Prosecution also presented evidence that linked Ngudjolo specifically and directly to the attack.

The Defence Case

16. In his defence, Ngudjolo alleged that the attack was carried out by Kinshasa government and Ugandan forces; that he was not the leader of the militia at the time of the events; and that he had an alibi for the time of the Bogoro attack (never disclosed before trial), claiming that he was engaged in nursing duties, in particular in assisting a woman to give birth in another village. Regarding his admissions to P-317 and P-219, he disputed the testimony of both witnesses and denied having made the statements.
17. He also called witnesses to rebut evidence of prosecution witnesses. In particular, [REDACTED] testified that [REDACTED] had been a student, not a soldier, at the time of the Bogoro attack. Ngudjolo also offered school records to establish that P-250 had been in school, though the records were not consistent with the particular details offered by [REDACTED].

The Trial Chamber's Judgment regarding Ngudjolo

18. On 18 December 2012 Trial Chamber II issued a judgment against Ngudjolo, finding him not guilty of all charges (“Judgment”).⁵
19. After preliminary observations (paras.322-336), the Chamber concluded that the Prosecution proved the attack on Bogoro and that Ngiti combatants from the Walendu-Bindi collectivity and Lendu combatants from Bedu-Ezekere groupement were present in Bogoro on that day (para.337). It also found that children under 15 years of age, some carrying bladed instruments, who were from Bedu-Ezekere groupement, were present during the attack on Bogoro on 24 February 2003 (para.516).
20. The Chamber also rejected almost all of the key lines of defence, including Ngudjolo’s claim that he was just a nurse and imposter who duped senior officials in Ituri; that he was delivering a baby all day on 24 February 2003; that no Lendu from Bedu-Ezekere participated in the Bogoro or Mandro attacks; that Bogoro presented no strategic interest to the Bedu-Ezekere groupement and that they had no permanent military posts or commanders. The Chamber further rejected Ngudjolo’s claim that he never met P-317, and that he had not admitted leading the Bunia attack to a public prosecutor.
21. The Chamber found that Ngudjolo’s nomination to the post of deputy chief of staff for the FNI-FRPI alliance showed that the FNI President D03-11 recognised Ngudjolo as a person of real influence militarily as well as someone who was sufficiently capable of occupying the post (para.471). Indeed, it found multiple “signs of just how important the accused was [in early March 2003]” and that he held “such a senior position” at that time (paras.464, 500), including the significant fact that he signed the Cessation of Hostilities Agreement on 18

⁵ ICC-01/04-02/12-3. The Judgment was issued in French. In this document in support of the Appeal, the Prosecution at times quotes from an unofficial internal OTP English translation of the Judgment.

March. However, it declined to find beyond reasonable doubt that Ngudjolo led the Bedu-Ezekere groupement in late February and thus declined to find him criminally responsible for the 24 February Bogoro attack (para.503), including for the use of child soldiers during that attack (para.516).

22. The Chamber detailed its reasoning underlying the decision. In pertinent part, it also expressed doubts as to credibility in certain respects and thus declined to rely on the evidence of three key Prosecution witnesses – P-250, P-279, and P-280 – whose testimony was offered to establish Ngudjolo’s leadership role. It further rejected the probative value of other Prosecution evidence on various grounds, including that because it was corroborated by Prosecution witnesses whose credibility the Chamber rejected, the evidence itself could not be relied upon.
23. The Chamber accepted the credibility of the UN worker, P-317, who testified that Ngudjolo admitted his role to her. But it nonetheless declined to find that evidence persuasive, concluding that Ngudjolo’s confession to her was not sufficiently detailed and hypothesizing that he could possibly have falsely claimed responsibility for the Bogoro attack in order to make himself appear more important (para. 434).
24. P-250 testified as an insider witness, a member of the Bedu-Ezekere militia. The Chamber found that P-250’s evidence about the militia had “an undeniable ring of honesty” and “described [details] clearly and with an apparent concern for accuracy” (para.137). However, it found his testimony about Ngudjolo’s authority lacked the same level of detail, seemed “particularly wavering” (para.138), or was vague and self-contradictory (paras.139-141); noted occasional “strange” statements during the witness’s 16-day testimony; and characterized two specific in-court incidents as “peculiar” (para.141). It also cited contradictory evidence from defence witnesses and school records [which testimony and documents themselves are inconsistent] to the effect that P-250 was in school during the period that he said he was a member of the militia (paras.142-159).⁶ The Chamber also was troubled that other Prosecution witnesses did not corroborate P-250's testimony as to his membership in the militia and presence in the area (para. 154), though at the same time it rejected the corroborative evidence of P-28, who testified that P-250 was an insider member of the militia, based on its speculation that P-28 and P-250 may have had an opportunity to collude (para.154-155).

25. P-279 testified for nine days. He testified that he was part of the Bedu-Ezekere militia and participated in the battle at Bogoro. He provided details about training; identified Ngudjolo as the person responsible for three training camps; testified that Katanga came to the Zumbe camp to speak with Ngudjolo about the Bogoro attack; testified that Ngudjolo gave the order to attack and, afterwards, to bury the corpses; and described seeing Katanga and Ngudjolo enter a school building together at the end of the fighting (paras.162-167). The Chamber appeared satisfied as to certain parts of P-279's evidence, in particular his descriptions of the use of fetishes (para.170), but was troubled by inconsistencies in his chronology and in other aspects of his testimony. For example, he was confused and gave contradictory evidence about the year of his birth and "was very reluctant to join in the efforts, during the hearing, to determine his exact age" (para.178; also para.161); he testified that he had been a bodyguard for the wife of a commander, whereas his previous statement said he was the commander's bodyguard (para.175); he provided two different explanations for his ability to identify Katanga; it was unclear from his testimony which school he saw the two Accused enter after the massacres, the Bogoro Institute or the Kavali School (significant because it was impossible to see the Bogoro Institute from the witness's location), a point the Chamber said the Prosecution should have clarified during its questioning (paras.176-177); he denied having known P-280, leading the Chamber to suspect that the two witnesses colluded (paras.180-183); and he stayed silent and made no effort to explain when confronted with his contradictions (para.183).

26. P-280, who testified for eight days, described the military structure of the Bedu-Ezekere groupement, the Lagura training camp, Ngudjolo's residence, and the battle of Bogoro. The Chamber rejected his evidence as well, finding "contradictions and inconsistencies" in his testimony that, to the Chamber, "raise great doubt that he was present in Zombe and [...] Bogoro" (para.202). The Chamber was particularly troubled by a map the witness drew in court, indicating the location of an airport in Zombe, because its own site visit confirmed that the airport was not located where the witness's hand-drawn map signified (para.208-209). Since, in its view, the drawing instead looked like a schematic drawing of Aveba, it concluded that the witness in fact may not have been in Zombe and used his memory of Aveba to provide the details he added on the Zombe map (paras.212-213).
27. The Chamber dismissed as not probative the confession that Ngudjolo made to P-317. While the Chamber credited her testimony that Ngudjolo took credit for the Bogoro attack, it found (para. 434) that

"[d]espite giving some indications as to what the accused's involvement may have been in the preparation of the attack on Bogoro, the statements by P-317 appear to generalise too much for us to draw any definitive conclusions as to what the status and the role of the accused were within Bedu-Ezekere groupement. Moreover, on this same issue, even if this theory were to be cautiously considered, Ngudjolo, like other actors in Ituri at the time, may possibly have wanted to claim responsibility for organising an attack just to be recognised as a senior ranking officer in the event of joining the regular Congolese army.”

28. Finally, the Prosecution introduced the “Soap Letter”, a document that was written on 4 January 2003 and signed by both D03-66 and Martin Banga, on behalf of “the Zumbe delegation at Aveba”. This document corroborated the testimony of key witnesses P-250 and P-28 that (a) Ngudjolo sent a Zumbe delegation to meet Germain Katanga in Aveba (located in Walendu-Bindi) a few weeks before the Bogoro attack, to organize the attack and bring supplies back from Walendu-Bindi; and (b) the Bedu-Ezekere militia was a structured organization headquartered in Zumbe and aligned with the FRPI in Walendu-Bindi (as indicated by the fact it was referring to itself as “FRPI”). The Chamber declined to give this letter any weight because D03-66, a Defence witness who agreed that he wrote and signed the letter, stated that a stamp on the face of the letter did not appear to be legitimate. The Chamber declined to place any weight on this evidence (para.374).

C. OVERVIEW OF THE APPEAL

29. The Prosecution is bringing three grounds of appeal before the Appeals Chamber. In its First Ground of Appeal, the Prosecution argues that the Trial Chamber erred in law in its application of Article 66(3). The Chamber misinterpreted the legal standard of “guilt beyond a reasonable doubt”, and effectively required demonstration of guilt beyond any doubt by the Prosecution. It rejected evidence on hypothetical and fanciful grounds that are completely unsupported in the record. When facts were contested, the Chamber was unable to resolve the inconsistencies with confidence, and thus found reasonable doubt. As a result of this legal error, the Chamber entered defective factual findings that no reasonable trier of fact would have reached, thereby also committing a factual error.

30. The Prosecution's Second Ground of Appeal involves an error of law regarding the application of Article 74(2), since the Trial Chamber failed to consider the totality of the evidence and facts in its decision-making process. It found reasons to reject portions of almost every witness' evidence and then concluded that credibility as to heavily corroborated facts was open to doubt. No evidence rejected in some part on credibility grounds could be trusted to corroborate other evidence. As a consequence of its piecemeal approach, the Trial Chamber declined to find facts that were proven by multiple sources of consistent and corroborating evidence, made erroneous assessments of the credibility of the Prosecution's evidence and reached unreasonable factual conclusions, thereby also erring in fact.
31. Finally, the Prosecution's Third Ground of Appeal involves a procedural error regarding the proper application of Article 64(2). [REDACTED].⁷
32. The Prosecution is seeking a reversal of the Decision. It is also seeking a factual finding from the Appeals Chamber pertaining to Ngudjolo's position of authority and a re-trial confined to the remaining components of the charges, or, if the Appeals Chamber does not accept the request for a factual finding, a full re-trial.

D. STANDARD OF REVIEW

33. For legal errors, the Appeals Chamber "will not defer to the Trial Chamber's interpretation of the law. Rather, it will arrive at its own conclusions as to the appropriate law and determine whether or not the Trial Chamber misinterpreted the law.”⁸ The Appeals Chamber will therefore articulate the correct legal standard and review the relevant factual findings of the Trial Chamber accordingly.⁹

34. The Appeals Chamber has stated that there is an error of fact when the Trial Chamber misappreciated facts, disregarded relevant facts or took into account facts extraneous to the sub judice issues.¹⁰ The Appeals Chamber has set out a standard of reasonableness in the review of appeals judgments on interim release that equally applies to purported errors in the Trial Chamber’s appreciation of evidence in a final appeal:

“The Appeals Chamber will not interfere with a Pre-Trial or Trial Chamber’s evaluation of the evidence just because the Appeals Chamber might have come to a different conclusion. It will interfere only in the case of a clear error, namely where it cannot discern how the Chamber’s conclusion could have reasonably been reached from the evidence before it. In the absence of any clear error on the part of the Pre-Trial Chamber, the Appeals Chamber defers to the Pre-Trial Chamber.”¹¹

35. If a procedural error relates to the Chamber’s alleged defective exercise of its discretion, then the Appeals Chamber will review that error “with some deference”, it does “not conduct[...] a de novo review [...]. Rather, the Appeals

⁸ ICC-02/05-03/09-295OA, para.20.

⁹ The ICTY Appeals Chamber has held that in cases of an incorrect legal standard, the Appeals Chamber, after identifying the correct standard, will apply it to the evidence contained in the trial record and determine whether it is itself convinced beyond reasonable doubt as to the factual finding challenged by the appellant. D. Milosevic Appeal Judgment, paras.13-14 and authorities cited therein.

¹⁰ ICC-01/05-01/08-631-Red OA2, para.66.

Chamber will intervene only if the exercise of discretion amounts to an abuse of discretion".¹² If an error entails a defective interpretation and/or application of a non-discretionary procedural provision,¹³ this closely relates to an error of law and the appropriate standard of review should accordingly be applied.

36. An appellant is obliged not only to set out the alleged error, "but also to indicate, with sufficient precision, how this error would have materially affected the impugned decision".¹⁴ This does not require an appellant to demonstrate with a degree of certainty that the appealed decision would have come to a different conclusion. Rather, the appellant must demonstrate that the "error was critical to the verdict reached by the Trial Chamber"¹⁵ or that the error has "the potential to cause the impugned decision to be reversed or revised".¹⁶

E. THE PROSECUTION'S GROUNDS OF APPEAL

1. First Ground of Appeal: The Trial Chamber misapplied the criminal standard of proof

A. Overview of the First Ground of Appeal

37. The Trial Chamber correctly found that "in order to convict the accused, the Court must be convinced of the guilt of the accused beyond reasonable doubt".¹⁷ The Prosecution also accepts the finding of the Trial Chamber that the standard of "beyond reasonable doubt" applies to establishing the elements of the crime and the mode of liability, as well as to findings regarding the existence of the facts that are indispensable to enter a conviction.¹⁸

38. However, the Trial Chamber deviated from these principles when it entered factual findings. A number of key findings in the Judgment demonstrate a pattern whereby the Trial Chamber concluded that facts alleged by the Prosecution had not been established beyond reasonable doubt based on a possible alternative or competing inference or on other grounds. But, neither the competing inferences nor the other grounds purportedly establishing a reasonable doubt are based on evidence, logic, reason or common sense. At best, they establish a hypothetical alternative reading of the evidence. This demonstrates that the Trial Chamber, rather than applying the standard of proof beyond reasonable doubt, effectively required proof of the relevant facts to a degree of absolute certainty (i.e. beyond any doubt).
39. The Trial Chamber erred in law by applying an incorrect standard of proof under Article 66(3). In addition, based on the analysis presented below, the Prosecution also submits that the Trial Chamber erred in fact because no reasonable trier of fact could have found that the evidence does not establish beyond reasonable doubt that Ngudjolo was the leader of the Lendu combatants of the Bedu-Ezekere who attacked Bogoro on 24 February 2003.

B. The law on the standard of proof

40. Article 66(3) provides that the “[i]n order to convict the accused, the Court must be convinced of the guilt of the accused beyond reasonable doubt”.

¹⁸ Judgment, para.35.

41. According to the practice of national and international courts, at the end of the case, the accused is entitled to the benefit of the doubt as to whether his guilt has been proved.¹⁹ However, this does not imply that any doubt – no matter how fanciful - shall be weighed in favor of the accused. “it does not mean a mere possible doubt or a speculative, imaginary or forced doubt, because everything relating to human affairs is open to some possible or imaginary doubt”.²⁰ Hence, the standard does not require proof “beyond a shadow of a doubt”, “beyond all possible doubt”,²¹ or “absolute certainty” or “moral certainty”.²²
42. Reasonable doubt means that any competing inference to a finding of guilt must be founded on logic, reason and common sense (i.e. it must be reasonable) and be based on evidence adduced at the trial (or lack thereof).
43. The Appeals Chamber of the UN ICTR ruled that *“the reasonable doubt standard in criminal law [...] must be based on logic and common sense, and have a rational link to the evidence, lack of evidence or inconsistencies in the evidence.”*²³ A Trial Chamber of the UN ICTY specified that any competing reasonable inference other than guilt must be based on “evidence admitted at trial”.²⁴
44. Similarly the Supreme Court of Canada found that “[a] reasonable doubt is a doubt based on reason and common sense which must logically be derived from the evidence or absence of evidence. While more is required than proof that the accused is probably guilty, a reasonable doubt does not involve proof to an absolute certainty. Such a standard of proof is impossibly high."²⁵ The Ontario Court of Appeal upheld the instruction given by a trial court to the jury that "reasonable doubt is an honest doubt, a fair doubt, a doubt based upon reasons and common sense. It is a real doubt, not some imaginary or frivolous doubt."²⁶

45. The Supreme Court of the United States repeatedly defined a reasonable doubt as one "based on reason which arises from the evidence or lack of evidence."²⁷ The Supreme Court also approved an alternative definition of reasonable doubt as "a doubt that would cause a reasonable person to hesitate to act".²⁸
46. The High Court of Australia defines reasonable doubt as "not a mere conjectural, visionary doubt, or a doubt arising from the bare possibility of [the accused's] innocence, but a real doubt created by the operation of the circumstances before them upon their reason and common sense".²⁹
47. Model jury instructions articulate the same principle. For instance, the Jury Manual issued by the Judicial Studies Committee of Scotland defines reasonable doubt as: "a doubt, arising from the evidence, based on reason, not on sympathy or prejudice, or on some fanciful doubt or theoretical speculation. It's the sort of doubt that would make you pause or hesitate before taking an important decision in the practical conduct of your own lives. Proof beyond reasonable doubt is less than certainty, but it's more than a suspicion of guilt, and more than a probability of guilt."³⁰ In the United States, recommended jury instructions follow a similar line: "The law recognizes that, in dealing with human affairs, there are very few things in this world that are known with absolute certainty.

Therefore the law does not require the People to prove a defendant's guilt beyond all possible doubt. ... A reasonable doubt is an honest doubt of the defendant's guilt for which a reason exists based upon the nature and quality of the evidence. This is an actual doubt, not an imaginary doubt".³¹

48. The Federal Court of Justice of Germany similarly found that "it is necessary, but also sufficient for conviction, that a degree of certainty is reached which common sense tells us to be sufficient, and which leaves no reasonable doubt. The mere abstract, theoretical possibility that the accused was not the perpetrator cannot prevent his conviction. Since such a possibility can never be excluded given the shortcomings of human cognition, judges could otherwise never come to a conclusion about the truth".³² In separate judgments the same Court reiterated that competing inferences to a criminal conviction must be reasonable, taking into consideration experience of life,³³ and they must be based on evidence adduced at trial.³⁴
49. Although the Appeals Chamber of this Court has not yet pronounced itself on the interpretation of the beyond reasonable doubt standard, its jurisprudence on the Article 58(1)(a) standard for "reasonable grounds to believe" may be of assistance to determine the meaning of "reasonable" within the context of Article 66(3). Accordingly, the requirement of "reasonableness" mandates that the Chamber's evidentiary inquiry be firmly grounded on the facts placed before the Chamber – and not on purely subjective impressions.³⁵

50. The authorities cited above demonstrate that the “beyond reasonable doubt” standard (a) does not require that guilt be established beyond any conceivable doubt; and (b) only leads to an acquittal if the doubt in question is a truly “reasonable” one that is supported by the trial record and consistent with logic and common sense. The task of a Trial Chamber is to scrutinize the record and determine whether the evidence before it gives rise to a “reasonable doubt” favouring the accused. However, the standard does not allow the Chamber to artificially create “doubts” that find no support in the trial record – much less when in addition they defeat logic or common sense.

C. Factual findings and arguments

51. It is easy to articulate the appropriate standard, but harder to apply it in practice. The Prosecution recognizes that there is considerable and necessary deference to the fact-finder’s conclusions as whether evidence meets the requisite beyond reasonable doubt test, in part because those conclusions require credibility assessments that are difficult to second-guess and in part because the line between reasonable and unreasonable doubt is rarely precise.

52. That said, “everything relating to human affairs is open to some possible or imaginary doubt”³⁶ and the boundary, however difficult, nonetheless must be drawn between possible/imaginary doubt and reasonable doubt. The Prosecution submits that in this case the pattern of findings by the Trial Chamber in fact demonstrates that the Chamber misdrew that line. Consistently, the Chamber was consumed by “mere possible doubt or a speculative, imaginary or forced doubt”; it repeatedly cited “possible” alternative explanations and thus found itself unable to reach firm conclusions about any contested matters.

53. The following factual findings of the Trial Chamber are indicative of its misapplication of the criminal standard of proof. These findings show a consistent pattern in the analysis of the evidence, whereby the Trial Chamber effectively entertained any doubt - including doubt not based on evidence, reason, logic or common sense.

Witness P-317 (paras.284-296, 434)

54. Witness P-317 was a UN worker in the DRC, with MONUC’s human rights section.³⁷ In that capacity, between 24 March and 7 April 2003, she carried out an investigation on the 24 February 2003 Bogoro attack.³⁸ She was told by UPDF officials that the forces based in Bogoro were under the command of Ngudjolo.³⁹ Therefore, on 4 April 2003, P-317 met with Ngudjolo, who admitted to her that he had organized the attacks on Bogoro and on Mandro,⁴⁰ but insisted that Bogoro was a legitimate military target and that there were no civilians living at Bogoro at the time.⁴¹
55. The Trial Chamber found that P-317 was credible and that it could rely on her testimony.⁴² It accepted that on 4 April 2003, less than eight weeks after the Bogoro attack, Ngudjolo admitted to P-317 that he had organized the attack.⁴³ The Trial Chamber expressly referred to this admission being made after

Ngudjolo joined the FNI-FRPI alliance on 22 March 2003.⁴⁴ The Chamber also accepted that this confession linked Ngudjolo to the preparation of the attack.⁴⁵ However, the Trial Chamber refused to rely on the evidence of P-317, either in whole or in part, to establish the position of authority of Ngudjolo in the context of the attack on Bogoro on 24 February 2003. It did so, inter alia, because in its view it could not be excluded that Ngudjolo lied to the witness and that he “may possibly have wanted to claim responsibility” to enhance his career⁴⁶ – an explanation that was never offered by Ngudjolo himself (he denied having ever met P-317 or that he made the statement and instead insisted that the witness lied)⁴⁷ and that ignores that he did not have to confess to criminality to show his importance since, at the time Ngudjolo made the statement, he was already well recognized as “a senior ranking office”. Before he met with P-317, Ngudjolo joined the FNI-FRPI Alliance (on 22 March 2003) as the FRPI chief of staff,⁴⁸ one of the highest military positions within the FNI/FRPI. Moreover, on 18 March 2003, he had signed a peace agreement on behalf of his militia.⁴⁹

56. The finding that an Accused admitted to having committed the alleged crime, when the admission is independently supported by corroborating evidence, is ordinarily considered sufficient to overcome reasonable doubt. The Prosecution’s research has not uncovered any case in which judges agreed that a person confessed and that the confession was knowingly and voluntarily made, but refused to credit the confession because of a speculative explanation -- unsupported by the record and never proffered by the defence-- that the person had a “possible” reason to lie. More particularly, the Prosecution stresses that in this case there is no evidence that Ngudjolo exaggerated his role in the attack on Bogoro.

57. The Trial Chamber's finding that Ngudjolo exaggerated his role in the attack is also against logic and common sense. The Trial Chamber found that the admission of Ngudjolo to P-317 provided some indications as to what Ngudjolo's role prior to the attack on Bogoro could have been.⁵⁰ Therefore, the Chamber accepted that Ngudjolo was truthful when referring to P-317 about his involvement in the preparation of the attack. This is in contradiction with the Trial Chamber's blanket conclusion that Ngudjolo exaggerated his role in the attack when talking to P-317 – which must logically assume the untruthfulness of his account to P-317. The Trial Chamber's finding is also logically incompatible with its other conclusions and in particular its rejection of the Defence's theory that Ngudjolo was an imposter who succeeded in duping all the senior figures in Ituri whom he met during the events there,⁵¹ and that he obtained a senior military rank through a combination of luck and career opportunism.⁵² In addition, Ngudjolo's admission to P-317, if read in its context, clearly indicates that he was not trying to bolster his involvement in the attack, but that he was trying to defend himself by stating that Bogoro was a legitimate military target and that there were no civilians living at Bogoro at the time.⁵³

58. The Trial Chamber posed two other lesser justifications for refusing to credit Ngudjolo's admission. First, it found his admission to be too general to permit the Court to find definitively his status and role within the Bedu-Ezekere groupement at the time of the attack.⁵⁴ Of course, that does not diminish the probative value of the admission; if anything, it means that the Chamber could not rely on that alone to find that he was the leader of the Lendu combatants that attacked Bogoro on 23 February 2003. The Chamber also concluded that Ngudjolo's admission was inconsistent with another admission he made several weeks later to a Congolese public prosecutor, admitting then that he had led the attack on Bunia on 6 March 2003 while saying nothing about other battles in the region.⁵⁵ The Trial Chamber's conclusion is predicated on the unreasonable assumption that Ngudjolo would have and should have made identical confessions at different times to different investigators, thus if the confessions were not fully symmetrical they were necessarily unreliable.⁵⁶

Witness D02-176 (paras.431-433)

59. Witness D02-176, a combatant on the opposing side at Bogoro, testified that "he knew very well" that Ngudjolo was the "number one" military leader in Zombe and commander of operations during the attack on Bogoro. He unequivocally recognized Ngudjolo as one of the Lendu commanders at Bogoro on 24 February 2003.⁵⁷ He added that this was a truth known by everyone. The witness further specified that Ngudjolo was the Chief of Staff of the FNI, the umbrella militia to which the Lendu combatants at Bogoro belonged.⁵⁸
60. The Trial Chamber accepted that D02-176 was a captain and company commander of the UPC at Bogoro and he had participated in the defence of Bogoro,⁵⁹ and indeed accepted that he was particularly suited to specify the Judgment, para. 456.

⁵⁶ The Chamber can also no draw an inference from the fact that Mr Ngudjolo has not admitted to P-317 his role in the Bunia attack, when the Chamber itself has rejected that the he played a role in that attack, Judgment, para. 456.

military positions of the enemy with which he had repeatedly engaged previously.⁶⁰ Nonetheless, the Trial Chamber declined to credit D02-176's description of Ngudjolo's position of authority because it was unable to exclude the possibility that D02-176 might have confused Ngudjolo's status within the FNI in March 2003 with his earlier status and position prior to the attack on Bogoro.⁶¹ But again, the Trial Chamber's competing inference is not based on any evidence on the record. To the contrary, the witness's testimony did not leave open the possibility that he was confused and had mistaken when Ngudjolo held the relevant position of command.⁶²

Attack on Bunia on 6 March 2006 (para.456)

61. It was uncontested that on 6 March 2003, the UPDF Lendu combatants attacked Bunia.⁶³ On 17 June 2004 Ngudjolo admitted to a Congolese public prosecutor that he "led the operation on 6 March 2003 in Bunia".⁶⁴ The Chamber did not doubt in any way the authenticity of the document transcribing this admission,⁶⁵ found that Ngudjolo gave this statement to the Congolese public prosecutor,⁶⁶ and noted that Ngudjolo did not deny having made this admission.⁶⁷ It also expressly rejected the credibility of Ngudjolo's testimony explaining the admission - he denied having participated in the battle of Bunia and claimed that his statement to the Congolese prosecutor was merely intended to explain how he came to hold the position of Chief of Staff of the FNI-FRPI.⁶⁸

62. Having reviewed all this and having made reliability findings, however, the Trial Chamber concluded that it could not reach any factual conclusions regarding Ngudjolo's position of authority two weeks after Bogoro, because of the competing factual explanations. It stated that "it cannot dismiss the possibility that [Ngudjolo] led Bedu-Ezekere's Lendu combatants during the Bunia operation; however it cannot conclude this beyond all reasonable doubt".⁶⁹ It explained that (a) despite Ngudjolo's acceptance of overall responsibility for the operation, other evidence led to the conclusion that the offensive on Bunia was carried out by the UPDF and the Lendu combatants; (b) Ngudjolo does not identify which troops he supposedly led in Bunia; and (c) Ngudjolo did not also mention having participated in the battles of Bogoro and Mandro.⁷⁰ These reasons are inadequate to establish reasonable doubt that Ngudjolo truthfully accepted responsibility for leading the Lendu combatants of the Bedu-Ezekere during the attack on Bunia. Instead, this is another example that the Trial Chamber effectively required proof beyond any conceivable doubt.
63. First, the Trial Chamber speculated that Ngudjolo claimed exclusive overall responsibility over the operation, even after having found that Ngudjolo told the Congolese public prosecutor that he "only led the operation on 6 March 2003 in Bunia".⁷¹ However, there is no evidence that Ngudjolo ever claimed to have led the UPDF, which together with Lendu combatants attacked Bunia. Perhaps mindful of this, the Trial Chamber did not enter a finding that Ngudjolo had claimed overall responsibly, but merely stated that he seemed [semble] to have done so. A speculative and impressionistic assertion of this kind, supported by no evidence, cannot be sufficient to draw any inference or to establish reasonable doubt.

⁶⁹ Judgment, para.456.

⁷⁰ Judgment, para.456.

⁷¹ Judgment, para.455.

64. Second, the Chamber noted that the attack on Bunia was carried out by the UPDF and the Lendu combatants,⁷² which included combatants from Bedu-Ezekere,⁷³ but also gave significant consideration to the fact that Ngudjolo in his admission to the Congolese prosecutor did not expressly state which of those troops he led in Bunia. The Trial Chamber effectively required specification from Ngudjolo as to whether he had led the UPDF (the armed forces of the State of Uganda) or the Lendu combatants of Bedu-Ezekere (the fighters representing Ngudjolo's ethnicity and place of residence) in order to give appropriate weight to his admission. In the context of the facts of this case, this requirement was plainly unreasonable: there was no basis to accept even as a possibility that Ngudjolo could have led the UPDF during the attack. In fact, the Chamber itself took note of the Defence's admission that on 6 March 2003, the UPDF contingent that was based in Dele, a suburb of Bunia, was commanded by Captain Kiza.⁷⁴ On the other hand, it also accepted that by the end of 2002, Ngudjolo was "quite an important person within the Bedu-Ezekere groupement", owing, among others to the military training that he had received at the Garde Civile.⁷⁵ Having determined that (a) the UPDF was led at the time of the attack by a different person than the accused, and (b) that the accused had a position of authority at the relevant time in a different group (the Lendu combatants), there was no basis to expect that any admission by Ngudjolo would have had to specify the group that he was leading. Once more, the Chamber is artificially creating a doubt based on speculation and disconnected from the facts of the case.

65. Third, the Trial Chamber found reasonable doubt that Ngudjolo led the Lendu combatants of Bedu-Ezekere during the Bunia operation because in his admission to the Congolese public prosecutor he did not mention having participated in the battles of Bogoro or Mandro.⁷⁶ Once more, it was unnecessary for the Chamber to expect that an admission by the accused of one attack would necessarily have to mention the accused's involvement in other attacks.

Overall conclusions (para.500)

66. As part of its overall conclusions on the role and function of Ngudjolo in the Bedu-Ezekere groupement during the attack on Bogoro,⁷⁷ the Trial Chamber stated: “one cannot necessarily and totally exclude, from the political and military context at the time, that Ngudjolo was able to impose himself as a soldier and as an indispensable interlocutor after the battle of Bogoro and after that only. In addition, the Chamber is of the view that his appointment to a high position within the FNI/FRPI alliance does not inevitably show that he was already an important leader before, including on 24 February 2003.”⁷⁸

67. This unambiguously reflects that the Trial Chamber misunderstood the meaning of proof beyond reasonable doubt and applied an incorrect standard of proof to an absolute certainty. Beyond reasonable doubt does not require that the Chamber “necessarily and totally” [nécessairement et totalement] exclude an alternative possibility – that Ngudjolo was not a senior combatant on 24 February 2003 but instead was a nurse on that date, and that he became a senior militia commander shortly after the attack on Bogoro. Necessary and total exclusion is not required; according to the standard articulated by Article 66(3), the relevant question is whether such a scenario can reasonably be excluded. Similarly, the Chamber was concerned that Ngudjolo's appointment to a high position within the FNI/FRPI alliance did not “inevitably” [obligatoirement] show that he was already an important leader before, and including on 24 February 2003. But, like necessary and total, inevitability is not the standard.

⁷⁶ Judgment, para.456; see also para.497.

⁷⁸ Judgment, para.500 (emphasis added).

68. In any event, while the Trial Chamber excluded the certainty that Ngudjolo was a leader prior to Bogoro, it failed to indicate any factual or evidentiary basis for its competing inference that Ngudjolo might have imposed himself as a soldier, leader, and indispensable interlocutor only afterwards. The Prosecution recalls that a Trial Chamber must, at a minimum “indicate [...] with sufficient clarity the basis of the decision [and] identify which facts it found to be relevant in coming to its conclusion.”⁷⁹ No such facts are identified, and in light of other findings of the Chamber, this competing inference appears also to be unsupported by logic or common sense. The Trial Chamber accepted, for example, that by the end of 2002, Ngudjolo was “quite an important person within the Bedu-Ezekere groupement”, due, inter alia, to the military training that he had received at the Grade Civile.⁸⁰ The Chamber further noted that Ngudjolo’s speeches showed that he had in-depth knowledge of what was happening in Ituri and that his speeches were not written by a poorly informed mere nurse⁸¹ – as Ngudjolo attempted to portray himself. In addition, based on an admission by the Defence, the Chamber found that as of 22 March 2003, Ngudjolo held the position of chief of staff within the newly formed FNI-FRPI Alliance.⁸² The Chamber also rejected the Defence’s theory that he was an imposter who succeeded in duping all the senior figures in Ituri whom he met during the events there,⁸³ or that he obtained a senior military rank through a combination of luck and career opportunism.⁸⁴ In sum, since the Chamber accepted that already prior to the attack on Bogoro Ngudjolo was an important person within the Bedu-Ezekere groupement with military background, and at the same time rejected the possibility that Ngudjolo's appointment as the Chief of Staff of the FNI-FRPI Alliance on 22 March 2003 came out of nowhere, it is mystifying how the Chamber reached the hypothetical inference that Ngudjolo – whom it found was an important figure in the militia both before the attack and after it -- might not have held a senior military position within the Bedu-Ezekere groupement on the day of the Bogoro attack.

D. The error materially impacts on the Judgment

69. The error described under the First Ground of Appeal materially impacts on the appealed Judgment. The correct application of the standard of proof to establishing the relevant facts of the case and the guilt of the accused is a key pillar of the proper adjudication of a case. If the Trial Chamber erred by applying an incorrect standard of proof and unreasonably required the evidence to exclude any doubt, then its Judgment cannot be sustained. In particular, the overall conclusion that it cannot be established beyond reasonable doubt that Ngudjolo was the leader of the Lendu combatants who participated in the attack on Bogoro on 24 February 2003,⁸⁵ as well as its underlying factual findings will be unreliable. As a result, this error materially affects the very basis for the Trial Chamber's judgment that Ngudjolo is not guilty of the crimes charged.
70. The four examples of the Chamber's elevated and unrealistic standard of proof illustrate and explain its inability to find beyond reasonable doubt that Ngudjolo had authority over the Lendu combatants at Bogoro on 24 February 2003. Each of them, even if viewed separately, significantly affects the Judgment and because of the demonstrable errors in articulating and assessing reasonable doubt, each individually and cumulatively demonstrate that the Judgment must be reversed.

⁸⁵ Judgment, para.503.

2. Second Ground of Appeal: The Chamber erred by failing to consider the totality of the evidence and facts for its decision-making

A. Overview of the Second Ground of Appeal

71. The Trial Chamber rightly stated that under Article 74(2), the Judgment must “be based on its evaluation of the evidence and the entire proceedings”.⁸⁶ The Trial Chamber also said that it had “assessed the credibility of all relevant evidence [...] in light of all other relevant evidence on the record”⁸⁷ and that it had determined whether the evidence relied upon by the Prosecution established the alleged facts, notwithstanding any evidence to the contrary.⁸⁸ It specifically mentioned that in order to determine whether the alleged facts were proven, it relied on all the relevant evidence on the trial record,⁸⁹ and said that it was not precluded from relying on circumstantial evidence⁹⁰ and anonymous hearsay evidence (the probative value of the latter assessed by considering the context and conditions in which the evidence was obtained).⁹¹
72. However, the Judgment reveals that the Trial Chamber incorrectly applied these principles and adopted a wrong approach at each of the three different stages of the decision-making process, when it (a) assessed the credibility of the evidence; (b) made factual findings; and (c) reached its final decision on the guilt of Ngudjolo. Throughout the three phases of its decision-making process, the Chamber erred by failing to consider the totality of the evidence. In particular, the Chamber committed a legal error when it failed to assess individual items of evidence or specific facts in light of the entire record and in the context of other key relevant corroborating evidence (including circumstantial and hearsay evidence) or other key facts found by the Chamber.

73. Further, the Prosecution also submits that the Trial Chamber erred in fact because no reasonable trier of fact could have found that the evidence together with the factual findings entered by the Trial Chamber falls short of establishing beyond reasonable doubt that Ngudjolo was the leader of the Lendu combatants of the Bedu-Ezekere who attacked Bogoro on 24 February 2003.

B. The standards and procedures applicable to evidentiary decision and the different stages of the fact-finding process

(i) Law on the obligation to consider all relevant evidence at each stage of the decision-making process pursuant to Article 74(2)

74. Article 74(2) states that “[t]he Trial Chamber’s decision shall be based on its evaluation of the evidence and the entire proceedings”. This requires the Chamber to take into consideration for its decision-making the totality of the evidence “submitted and discussed before it at the trial”.⁹²

75. Following the practice of the UN ad hoc Tribunals, as well as national courts, the Prosecution submits that the fact-finding process inevitably is conducted in three stages: First, the Chamber must assess the credibility and reliability of the proffered evidence.⁹³ Second, based on the totality of the evidence that it

⁹³ Importantly, this assessment of credibility and reliability of all the evidence is different than, and inevitably will postdate, the assessment of admissibility of evidence under Article 69(4), a process wherein evidence is considered individually. See Prosecutor v. Seselj, IT-03-67-T, Decision on Prosecution Motion for Certification to Appeal the Decision of 7 January 2008, 21 May 2008 para.26; Prosecutor v. Hadzihasanovic et al., IT-01-47-T, Decision on the admissibility of documents of the Defence of Enver Hadzihasanovic, 22 June 2005, para.15; Prosecutor v. Milutinovic et al., IT-05-87-T, determines is credible and reliable, the Chamber must find whether the facts alleged by the Prosecution are established. And third, the Chamber must determine whether all of the constitutive elements of the crime and the form of responsibility alleged against the accused have been proven beyond a reasonable doubt.⁹⁴

First stage: Standards and procedures for assessing the credibility of evidence

76. Under existing international case-law, at the first stage,

“the Trial Chamber has to assess the credibility of the relevant evidence presented. This cannot be undertaken by a piecemeal approach. Individual items of the evidence, such as the testimony of different witnesses, or documents admitted into evidence, have to be analysed in the light of the entire body of evidence adduced. Thus, even if there are some doubts as to the reliability of the testimony of a certain witness, that testimony may be corroborated by other pieces of evidence leading the Trial Chamber to conclude that the witness is credible. Or, on the other hand, a seemingly convincing testimony may be called into question by other evidence which shows that evidence to lack credibility.”⁹⁵

77. Accordingly, “a tribunal of fact must never look at the evidence of each witness separately, as if it existed in a hermetically sealed compartment; it is the accumulation of all the evidence in the case which must be considered. The evidence of one witness, when *considered by itself, may appear at first to be of poor quality, but it may gain strength from other evidence in the case....”.*⁹⁶

78. It is well-established that a Chamber may find evidence credible and reliable on some aspects, while finding it unreliable on other aspects.⁹⁷ A Chamber must primarily assess the reliability of the portions of the evidence that go to the facts that are essential to enter a conviction.⁹⁸ Nevertheless, when rejecting part of the evidence, a Chamber may consider whether its finding against the reliability of one part of the evidence affects the reliability of other parts.⁹⁹

Second stage: Standards and procedures for making factual findings

79. Having analysed all the relevant evidence, “the Trial Chamber [must] determine whether the evidence upon which the Prosecution relies should be accepted as establishing the existence of the facts alleged, notwithstanding the evidence upon which the Defence relies”.¹⁰⁰

80. Also for this stage, the Chamber must look at the totality of the relevant evidence in relation to a specific fact to determine whether the fact is proved to the required standard.¹⁰¹ This does not mean that the Chamber must refer in its analysis to every single item of evidence, “as long as there is no indication that the Trial Chamber completely disregarded any particular piece of evidence. Such disregard is shown when evidence which is clearly relevant [...] is not addressed by the Trial Chamber’s reasoning”.¹⁰² Such degree of reasoning is required to comply with Article 74(5) that provides that the judgment “shall contain a full and reasoned statement of the Trial Chamber’s findings on the evidence and conclusions”.

Third stage: Standard and procedures applicable for the final determination of guilt

81. Finally, the Trial Chamber must decide whether all of the constitutive elements of the crime and the Accused's criminal responsibility have been proven. As explained by two judges of the Supreme Court of Canada, the trier of fact "must look at the totality of the evidence and determine whether on the proved facts, i.e. on those facts which survived the scrutiny [at the fact-finding stage], the accused is guilty".¹⁰³ Moreover, although a trial judge is not required to refer to every item of evidence, "the reasons must be responsive to the case's live issues and the parties' key arguments".¹⁰⁴

See also R v JMH [2011] 3 R.C.S, paras.31, 32: citing R v Morin, that it is an error of law to subject individual pieces of evidence to the standard of proof beyond a reasonable doubt and the evidence must be looked at as a whole. See also R v Rudge [2011] ONCA 791, paras. 47, 55, 65-66. Referring to the error of failing to take into account the totality of the evidence, the Court observed: "[T]he errors here arise from the trial judge's departure from the legally correct approach to the evidence that bears upon the ultimate question of guilt:...The strength of the Crown's case lay in the persuasive effect of the totality of the evidence, but the trial judge never considered whether the doubt he amassed...would survive an examination of those explanations considered in the context of the Crown's case as a whole....[T]he doubt the trial judge refers to at the close of his reasons was drawn from his consideration of each component of the Crown's case without the support of the other evidence, including evidence that presented a serious threat to the position of the defence. Simply put, the persuasive effect of the totality of the evidence- the strength of the Crown's case – was taken out of play" (paras. 65-66). Their sufficiency should be measured not in the abstract, but as they respond to the substance of what was in issue.*" See also R v Rudge [2011] ONCA 791 (citing R v Walker, R v JMH), para.56: "[A] trial judge is not required to record an assessment of every piece of evidence in his or her reasons... However, the reasons must be responsive to the case's live issues and the parties' key arguments".

(ii) Law on the obligation to consider all relevant evidence at each stage of the decision-making process

Circumstantial evidence

82. As Sir Richard May (former Judge of the ICTY) observed:¹⁰⁵ “Circumstantial evidence is of particular importance in war crimes trials where there may not be much direct evidence available. However, as stated in one old English case: ‘[i]t is no derogation of evidence to say that it is circumstantial’.¹⁰⁶ The individual items of such evidence may by themselves be insufficient to establish guilt, but taken together may be telling....¹⁰⁷ Circumstantial evidence may give rise to inferences, the drawing of which is mostly an application of common sense”.¹⁰⁸
83. The jurisprudence of the ad hoc tribunals makes clear that a Trial Chamber can rely on circumstantial evidence.¹⁰⁹ Indeed, circumstantial evidence has the same intrinsic value as direct evidence and is to be assessed in the same manner and to the same standard as any other evidence.¹¹⁰ The Appeals Chamber of the ICC also recognised that a Chamber may rely on circumstantial evidence.¹¹¹

¹⁰⁶ Taylor, Weaver and Donovan [1928] 21 Cr. App.R.20 and 21 per Lord Hewart C.J.

¹⁰⁷ This effect has been described in another English case: “[i]t has been said that circumstantial evidence is to be considered as a chain, and each piece of evidence as a link of the chain, but that is not so, for then, if any one link broke, the chain would fall. It is more like the case of a rope comprised of several cords. One strand of the cord may be insufficient to sustain the weight but three stranded together may be quite of sufficient strength. Thus it may be in circumstantial evidence – there may be a combination of circumstances, no one of which would raise a reasonable conviction or mere suspicion, but the whole taken together may create a conclusion of guilt with as much certainty as human affairs can require or admit of.” (Exall (1866) 4 F.&F.922, at 929).

¹⁰⁸ May, p.114, para.4.47.

¹⁰⁹ See e.g. Prosecutor v Bagilishema, Appeal Judgment, T-95-1A-1, 2 July 2002, para.37; Prosecutor v Jelusic, Appeal Judgment, IT-95-10-A, 5 July 2001, para.47. See also Prosecutor v Gacumbitsi, ICTR-2001-64-A, 7 July 2006. The Appeals Chamber confirmed that “it is also permissible to rely on circumstantial evidence to prove material facts”.

¹¹⁰ See e.g. Prosecutor v Brdjanin, IT-99-36-T, Judgment, 1 September 2004, para.35: the Trial Chambers of the ICTY have “not considered circumstantial evidence to be of less substance than direct evidence.” See also Prosecutor v Oric, IT-03-68-T, Judgment, 30 June 2006, para.21; Prosecutor v Martić, IT-95-11-T,

84. Accordingly, a Chamber cannot dismiss or reject circumstantial evidence, but must take it into account as part of the totality of the evidence when assessing the facts and making its ultimate conclusion.

Hearsay evidence

85. Hearsay evidence is admitted in international criminal trials, both historic and modern.¹¹² The ICTR Appeals Chamber has stated that “it is well established, that as a matter of law, it is permissible to base a conviction on circumstantial evidence and/or hearsay evidence.”¹¹³ Hearsay evidence has also been accepted as admissible in the ICC.¹¹⁴ The same procedure must be followed to assess its credibility and weight as is used for first-hand evidence: it must be assessed in the context of the totality of the evidence.¹¹⁵

See also examples from national common law and civil law systems where the same principles have applied: E.g. Desert Palace, Inc v Costa, 539, U.S.90, 100 123 S.Ct. 2148, 2154 (US Supreme Court 2003): “The reason for treating circumstantial evidence and direct evidence alike is both clear and deep rooted: ‘Circumstantial evidence is not only sufficient, but may also be more certain, satisfying and persuasive than direct evidence’; R v Puttick (1985) 1 CRNZ 644, 647 (Court of Appeal of New Zealand): “there is no distinction either in law or logic between facts established by direct evidence and those established by inference”; Swiss courts often emphasise that “Der Indizienbeweis ist dem direkten Beweis gleichwertig” (“Evidence by inference has the same value as direct evidence”), e.g. Decision of the Schweizerisches Bundesgericht, 6B-297/2007/zga, 4 September 2007; Spanish Supreme Court, STS 1586/1999, 10 November 1999, p.3, referring to circumstantial evidence as the “queen of evidence”.

C. Affected factual findings

86. While the error alleged by the Prosecution concerns the general approach taken by the Chamber in its assessment of evidence and the fact-finding throughout the entire Judgment, the Prosecution will demonstrate the existence of the error on the basis of a limited number of examples at each stage of the decision-making process. All were critical to the Trial Chamber's refusal to find that Ngudjolo led the Lendu combatants of Bedu-Ezekere who attacked Bogoro on 24 February 2003.

First stage: assessment of the credibility of evidence

(1) Assessment of documentary evidence

87. The Trial Chamber correctly referred to the principles applicable for the assessment of documentary evidence.¹¹⁶ However, when the Chamber applied these principles to its assessment of, in particular, the letter written by D03-66 entitled "Demande d'Aide" ("the Soap Letter"),¹¹⁷ it failed to properly consider, before implicitly rejecting its authenticity, the totality of the author's testimony and other corroborating evidence that supported the authenticity and reliability of the evidence.

The Soap Letter

88. The Soap Letter was written on 4 January 2003 by D03-66 and signed by both him and Martin Banga, on behalf of "the Zombe delegation at Aveba". It requested financial assistance from "Opérateur Oudo" to buy soap.¹¹⁸ The author of the Soap Letter, defence witness D03-66, testified that he wrote the letter on 4

January 2003, identifying his own handwriting;¹¹⁹ [REDACTED] Martin Banga signed it as “President of the delegation”;¹²⁰ and that both men went to Walendu-Bindi.¹²¹ D03-66 testified, however, that the letter’s contents were not true and that it bore a stamp that he (as author) did not put on the letter.¹²²

89. The Soap Letter was found in an FRPI camp Mehdu in Walendu-Bindi (i.e. outside Bedu-Ezekere)¹²³ by UN MONUC forces on 23 September 2004 and given by MONUC to the Prosecution on 21 October 2004.¹²⁴ The letter was a critical piece of documentary evidence as it indirectly corroborated testimony of key witnesses P-250 and P-28 that (a) Ngudjolo sent a Zombe delegation to meet Germain Katanga in Aveba (located in Walendu-Bindi) a few weeks before the Bogoro attack, to organize the attack and bring supplies back from Walendu-Bindi; and (b) the Bedu-Ezekere militia was a structured organization headquartered in Zombe and aligned with the FRPI in Walendu-Bindi (as indicated by the fact it was referring to itself as “FRPI”). And, conversely, the other consistent evidence also served to corroborate the letter’s authenticity.

90. For example, the Soap Letter referred to the Zombe delegation being present at “Aveba”, “Aveba Mukubwa”, or “Bolo”¹²⁵ (which D03-66 confirmed all refer to the same place).¹²⁶ The presence of the Zombe delegation in Aveba¹²⁷ is corroborated by P-250 and P-28.¹²⁸ Several witnesses, including Germain Katanga,¹²⁹ as well as documentary evidence¹³⁰ confirmed that Aveba (or Aveba Mukumbwa, or Bolo) was Katanga's military headquarters. The letter also referred to the Zumbe delegation having left the Bedu-Ezekere groupement three weeks before (4 January 2003) "pour mission de service à la collectivité des W/Bindi plus précisément à Aveba";¹³¹ and that they received a warm welcome in Aveba; all of which was corroborated by P-250 and P-28.¹³² P-250 also testified that the group's civilian leaders included Martin Banga and D03-66 (which was partly corroborated by D03-66)¹³³ and that the two men served these respective functions (a fact additionally confirmed by D03-88).¹³⁴ combatants, and that Oudo was the chief in control of the market in Tatu.¹³⁶ Concerning the note on the letter “C.C.I le colonel Matata Cobra”, D03-66 identified Cobra Matata as a military commander and Oudo’s hierarchical superior.¹³⁷ Witnesses confirmed that both Oudo and Cobra Matata were FRPI commanders based in Walendu-Bindi.¹³⁸ P-250 and P-28 confirmed that the Zombe delegation met with the FRPI delegation in Aveba;¹³⁹ and P-250 stated that a smaller delegation travelled to meet FRPI commander Opérateur Oudo, as the letter mentions.¹⁴⁰ The Soap Letter was further authenticated by another UN-seized letter dated 9 February 2003 addressed to the President of the movement (i.e. FRPI) at Aveba Mkubwa, which has a very similar confirmation of receipt on the bottom left corner as the Soap Letter (with the same name and handwriting and similar formula used for confirming receipt).¹⁴¹

92. Notwithstanding the testimony of a Defence witness admitting that he wrote it, as well as all these corroborative and corroborated indicia of authenticity, the Trial Chamber declined to find the Soap Letter was authentic and to accord it any probative value. Part of its decision was based on its concern about the presence of a particular stamp on the letter itself, and part was based on its belief that P-250 was not a credible witness and therefore his testimony could not corroborate the Soap Letter or any other evidence.

93. The Soap Letter bore a stamp “FRPI in Ituri, Staff headquarters, Tatsi-Zumbe”. The Chamber concluded that the stamp was not authenticated because (a) its author, D03-66, said he did not place the stamp on the letter, that the stamp looked “deformed” and was different than the one used by the group at the time;¹⁴² (b) the letter was the only document in evidence bearing this stamp; and (c) no other evidence – apart from the testimony of P-250, whom the Chamber declined to believe – established that the FRPI was based in Zumbe as early as 4 January 2003.¹⁴³
94. There is substantial reason to reject the Chamber’s assessment that the stamp was not authentic, namely: its author confirmed that a stamp did exist (although he claimed it was different to the one used);¹⁴⁴ the chain of custody shows that there was no evidentiary basis for D03-66’s claim that a false stamp was placed on the letter as the letter was with the FRPI in a different collectivity (Walendu-Bindi) until it was seized by UN MONUC forces before legal proceedings;¹⁴⁵ the

The Prosecution pointed out to D03-66 that it was implausible that somebody from a different collectivity could use another collectivity’s stamp. He provided no explanation as to why someone would place a forged stamp on the letter and/or who would do it, other than suggesting it may have been for political reasons and done by whomever provided the letter to the Prosecution (in this instance the UN MONUC). The letter remained with the FRPI of Walendu-Bindi (i.e. outside Bedu-Ezekere) until it was seized by UN forces at the request of the Tribunal de Grande Instance de Bunia on 23 September 2004, namely well before legal proceedings were instigated against the accused and the Prosecution obtained the original Soap Letter directly from the UN [REDACTED]. See also T-95-FRA-p.75-1.14-p.77-1.25/T-95-ENG-p.72-1.19-p.75-1.15; T-206-FRA-p.52, 1.14-p.55-1.3/T-206-ENG-p.55-1.22-

references in the letter itself to FRPI militia confirm that the Bedu-Ezekere and Walendu-Bindi militia groups were aligned;¹⁴⁶ evidence from several witnesses (and the UN Special Report), not just P-250, indicate that Zumbe was the headquarters for the Bedu-Ezekere groupement;¹⁴⁷ and P-250 who saw the letter for the first time when testifying, further authenticated the stamp saying who made the stamp, when, where and why.¹⁴⁸

95. Even if the stamp itself were inauthentic, however, the remaining circumstances overwhelmingly established that the letter itself was authentic and reliable.
96. Though the Chamber made no finding on the letter's authenticity, it implicitly accepted D03-66's claim that the letter's contents were not true. However, in doing so, the Chamber failed to consider the following evidence and facts relevant to assessing that witness' testimony: (a) he could not explain why a so-called "cover" letter required such a high level of detail; (b) he was evasive about Oudo's function, denying he was a commander; (c) the Chamber found he gave near-rehearsed testimony to avoid prejudicing the accused, on the issue of child soldiers. In that context, the Chamber failed to consider that both letter and stamp were highly incriminating against the accused, therefore D03-66 had an interest in lying.¹⁴⁹
97. The Prosecution agrees that the Trial Chambers have broad latitude in assessing evidence, so long as its assessment is not "undertaken by a piecemeal approach. Individual [...] documents admitted into evidence, have to be analysed in the explained, P-250 was shown the Soap Letter and stamp for the first time when testifying in Court, so that his spontaneous explanations for the stamp are another indicia of the reliability of his testimony on this issue.

D03-66 denied there was a Zumbe delegation, that they were in Aveba, and claimed he wrote this as a "cover" at Oudo's request to justify financial payment; but could not explain why a 'cover' letter required such detail as references to a Zumbe delegation, in Aveba, receiving a warm welcome, a smaller number of 15 travelling to Tatu, being there for three weeks by 4 January 2003, [REDACTED] Martin Banga as President. See also D03-66-T-295-ENG-p. 41-l.18-23, p. 42-l.7-p.43-l.14; T-297-FRA-p. 63-l.5-p.65-l.18/T-297-ENG-p.70-l.22-p.73-l.20. He denied having ever heard of the Bogoro attack of 24 February 2003 (only admitting knowledge of the prior 2002 attack). He lied about DRC-D03-0001-0328 (EVD-D03-00093) claiming it was drafted in about 2001 (T-295-ENG-p.57-ll.2-6; see also T-295-FRA-p.56-ll.10-12/T-295-ENG-p.57-ll.4-6), when it was pointed out to him that it refers to the base committee being in existence until July 2003, had written on it a note "2009", and was addressed to Ngudjolo's Defence counsel (T-295-Conf-ENG-p.57-l.23-p. 60-l.11; T-296-FRA-p.63-l.13-p.67- l.13/T-296-ENG-p.70-l.10-p.74-l.22). light of the entire body of evidence".¹⁵⁰ In this instance, the concession by a defence witness that he wrote and signed the letter, along with the numerous factors corroborating its authenticity, clearly sufficed to establish that the Soap Letter was what it purported to be and that the stamp on that letter was authentic. In either failing to take into consideration relevant corroborative evidence or demanding more corroboration – and dismissing the weight of the author's corroboration that he wrote the letter -- the Trial Chamber exceeded its reasonable latitude and committed clear error. The error is highly significant, since it impacted on the Chamber's ability to correctly assess these two key witnesses' accounts regarding Ngudjolo's authority.

98. Moreover, the Chamber dismissed the value of the letter because it had separately determined, on slim bases, that it would not credit the two Prosecution witnesses whose evidence corroborated the letter and in turn was corroborated by it. This method of reasoning is itself singularly circular and thus suspect; the determination of the witnesses' credibility and the Soap Letter should have been made on the basis of all the evidence, and thus, the corroborative value of each with respect to the other should have been considered, not ignored. Nor, in any event, was it appropriate to reject not simply witnesses it did not believe but all other independent evidence – without regard to the other indicia of reliability – because the evidence corroborated discredited witnesses.

(2) Assessment of credibility of Prosecution witnesses

99. In its Judgment, the Trial Chamber stated that it had considered the circumstances of each of the witnesses' testimonies in light of all of the evidence in the record, including whether it was possible to establish that the witness were physically present where they said they were at the relevant time during their testimony.¹⁵¹ Further, the Trial Chamber said that when assessing the reliability of witnesses, they considered the entirety of their accounts; the possibility of pressure, influence or collusion with other witnesses; and contradictions with other witnesses.¹⁵²

100. However, when assessing the credibility of Prosecution witnesses the Trial Chamber erred by not analyzing their testimony in light of relevant corroborating evidence. Moreover, the Chamber failed to make any assessment on the credibility of the core parts of the key witnesses' (P-250, P-279, P-280) evidence (or that of Prosecution witnesses P-28, P-219, P-12 or P-160) regarding Ngudjolo's role as leader of the Bedu-Ezekere militia that attacked Bogoro.

101. As an example of this error, and due to its importance for the case, the Prosecution focusses mainly on the Chamber's assessment of the credibility of witness P-250. As to the others, the Prosecution provides examples of the manner in which similar errors were made by the Chamber in its assessment.

Witness P-250¹⁵³

102. The Trial Chamber concluded that P-250 was not a militiaman based in Zumbe, as he claimed, but a student at school in Kagaba (in a different collectivity), in the period 2002 to 2003.¹⁵⁴ The process was erroneous and the result unreasonable.

103. First, the Chamber identified real or apparent contradictions within P-250's evidence, but failed to fully consider relevant evidence and facts when assessing those contradictions.¹⁵⁵ It also determined that, even as to matters on which it found the evidence credible and corroborated, it declined to rely on the credible part of the witness's evidence because it believed the witness lied on other matters. The Chamber thus rejected his key evidence, along with other corroborative evidence, that together established Ngudjolo's authority in Bedu-Ezekere, in particular that Ngudjolo became the leader when the group "became serious", that he sent the Zumbe delegation to Aveba to plan the Bogoro attack, and that he was a militiaman in Zumbe and was at the Bogoro attack. Finally, because it felt compelled to reject the witness's evidence altogether, it failed to consider how that evidence related to, and would undermine, defence witness evidence.

1. Evidence that corroborates P-250's account regarding Ngudjolo's authority

104. The core of P-250's testimony regarding Ngudjolo's authority was that Ngudjolo was the leader of the Bedu-Ezekere groupement when it "became serious" (i.e. more organised). This evidence was substantially corroborated by other express factual findings of the Chamber and other evidence, all of which the Chamber failed to take into account.

105. First, the Chamber made positive factual findings affirming the credibility of P-250's own account of Ngudjolo's leadership, in particular regarding P-250's information on the Bedu-Ezekere military structure and Ngudjolo's authority.¹⁵⁶ The Chamber found P-250 provided a clear account regarding the military authority, that Ngudjolo became the leader when the group "became more serious" (Judgment, para.128, citing P-250-T-91-FRA-p.30 (T-91-ENG-pp.30-31), instead providing an example of a so-called contradiction or exaggeration in P-250's testimony regarding Ngudjolo's role as leader: saying that P-250 said no ordinary soldier had the right to go and see Ngudjolo of his own accord, but later said an ordinary soldier could give information or report to the accused. However, the Chamber does not fully quote P-250: as he said no ordinary soldier could provide information directly (such as report his injury to Ngudjolo), but agreed that he would be obliged to give an important report in person (P-250-T-92-FRA-p.30-ll.7-15, p.33-ll.21-p.34-l.25/T-92-ENG-p.28-ll.2-8, p.31-l.9-p.32-l.15). (See also P-250-T-92-FRA-p.31-ll.17-18/T-92-ENG-p.29-ll.8-10: There was also some confusion as "reports" was being wrongly interpreted as "orders").

structure and commanders at the helm of each group [REDACTED],¹⁵⁷ and a rather precise description of the militia group's disciplinary code, the commanders who enforced it and the way in which the Zumbe military tribunal operated.¹⁵⁸ Additionally, P-250's information regarding the Bedu-Ezekere militia structure, including its commanders, was also corroborated by several witnesses.¹⁵⁹ D03-100 corroborated P-250's account, that [REDACTED] were commanders (and confirmed that [REDACTED]); by confirming his evidence, D03-100 also inferentially confirmed that P-250 (similar to P-28) in fact had been within the militia's inner circle, since he was able to provide information regarding its command structure.¹⁶⁰ Additional factual findings by the Chamber regarding Ngudjolo's position of authority, as described below at paragraphs 127 to 129, corroborate P-250's account. Moreover, as further detailed below at paragraphs 132 to 136, the Chamber wrongly excluded from its consideration evidence confirming that Ngudjolo was the leader of the Bedu-Ezekere militia group that attacked Bogoro.¹⁶¹

The Chamber said it was a fact that several witnesses described the positions occupied by the self-defence groups as "camps' or self defence groups, composed of combatants, soldiers or self-defence members. The Chamber concluded that combatant groups existed and were present more or less permanently before 24 February 2003 in fixed military positions in Bedu-Ezekere groupement, such as at Lagura, Ladile and Zumbe under the authority of well-known people, including Commander Kute at Lagura, Commander Boba Boba at Ladile, and Commander Nyunye at Zumbe.

2. Evidence that corroborates P-250's account of being a militiaman and present at the Bogoro attack

106. Ultimately, the Chamber was not satisfied that P-250 was truthful in testifying that he had been in the militia at the relevant time and was present at the Bogoro attack, relying on evidence proffered to show that he had instead been a student.¹⁶²

(i) P-250's detailed account of the Bedu-Ezekere militia

107. When assessing that, contrary to his testimony, P-250 was not a militiaman, the Chamber ignored (a) its own specific finding that during his testimony, he had answered with precision the great majority of questions put to him;¹⁶³ (b) another of its specific findings that P-250 provided a clear account regarding the military structure, commanders at the helm of each group, the disciplinary process and the manner in which the Zombe's military tribunal operated (which means that he could provide details regarding the inner-workings of the Bedu-Ezekere militia in Zombe at the relevant time period); (c) his detailed account of the Zombe delegation that left in late 2002 to travel to Aveba and the warm welcome the delegation received, testimony additionally corroborated by the Soap Letter (and given before he was shown the letter);¹⁶⁴ and (d) his detailed account regarding the Walendu-Bindi FRPI, also mentioned in the Soap Letter.¹⁶⁵

108. Moreover, the Chamber dismissed the corroborative evidence of P-28, which supported P-250's account that he was a member of the Zombe delegation to Aveba. The Chamber rejected the corroboration on the basis of evidence that “might suggest that Witnesses P-28 and P-250 were able to liaise with each other [in 2009 and 2010] before coming to testify”.¹⁶⁶ However, even disregarding that there was no evidence that the witnesses “colluded” to give false evidence, each witness separately gave statements to the Prosecution regarding the Zombe delegation in Aveba well before 2009, the dates of the speculated liaison.¹⁶⁷

(ii) P-250’s detailed account of the Bogoro attack

109. The Chamber failed to consider that P-250 provided a detailed and corroborated account of the attack, inter alia: (a) the start of the attack about half-past five;¹⁶⁸ (b) burial of corpses under Ngudjolo’s orders for hygiene reasons, corroborated by victim P-249 and P-279 (and also consistent with Ngudjolo’s medical background);¹⁶⁹ (c) the commanders’ meeting under the mango trees near the UPC camp after the attack, corroborated by P-28 and P-219;¹⁷⁰ and (d) the strategy employed to win the battle and details about routes followed by various commanders.¹⁷¹ On that latter point, the Chamber did not take into account the corroboration of P-250’s testimony that the aim was to surround and block off all

Bogoro attack;¹⁷⁹ and referred to two Prosecution witnesses who also identified Commander Kute at the attack.¹⁸⁰ In other words, it found substantial relevant parts of the witness's testimony to be proven by other evidence, yet disregarded that evidence as corroborative of P-250 in assessing P-250's credibility. Indeed, the Chamber failed to weigh that P-250's detailed account was corroborated even by defence witnesses present during the Bogoro attack, including D02-148 (FRPI officer)¹⁸¹ and D02-176 (UPC Captain).¹⁸²

3. Whether P-250 was a student in Kagaba or a militiaman in Zumbe during the relevant period

(i) D03-100's corroboration of P-250's account

110. The Chamber relied in large part on documentary evidence, purported school records that showed that P-250 was a student in Kagaba in 2002-2003 (which records, the Defence stated, [REDACTED]), along with the in-court testimony of D03-100 [REDACTED], to conclude that P-250 was not a militiaman but a student in Kagaba-Gety in 2002-2003.¹⁸³ This finding was critical: if P-250 was not a militiaman at the time, his first-hand account of militia activities predating and during the Bogoro attack could not be believed. However, in weighing the competing versions in the testimony and the school records, the Chamber appears to have first concluded that the records were reliable without considering the testimonial challenges, including testimony from [REDACTED], defence witness D03-100, that corroborated P-250's account of being a militiaman.

111. First, D03-100 confirmed that on P-250's return [REDACTED] in 2010 he was in a bad mental state and was rather aggressive; [REDACTED] and testified that "[i]t seemed as if he had become probably a soldier".¹⁸⁴

112. Second, D03-100 largely corroborated P-250 on the places and times when he was a student, contradicting the 1999-2004 school reports (namely EVD-D03-0006 to EVD-D03-0009)¹⁸⁵ that the Defence said [REDACTED].¹⁸⁶ D03-100 further confirmed that [REDACTED] when P-250 changed schools.¹⁸⁷ Accordingly, the Chamber should have taken into account D03-100's testimony on P-250's school years, notwithstanding that they contradicted the school reports. In particular, the Chamber should have considered the following aspects of D03-100's testimony that corroborated P-250's evidence regarding his schooling to assess D03-100's contradictory statements that P-250 was a student in 2002 to 2003 and to assess the authenticity and reliability of the school reports:

- First, D03-100 corroborated P-250's testimony that he completed his primary school education [REDACTED].¹⁸⁸
- Second, D03-100 corroborated P-250's testimony that he first attended secondary school [REDACTED], then in Songolo after the war broke out in 2000;¹⁸⁹ and only after that did P-250 first attend Kagaba school, where he started his second year of secondary school in 2000 and completed his second year of secondary school in 2001.¹⁹⁰ D03-100's testimony contradicts (a) school report EVD-D03-0006, which stated that P-250 started his first year level of secondary school at Kagaba, in 1999; and (b) school report EVD-D03-0007 that stated that P-250 completed his second year of secondary school in 2002.¹⁹¹

P-250 believed he finished his last year in 1996, whilst [REDACTED] stated he finished his primary schooling in 1999. EVD-OTP-0005 indicates P-250's final school year was in 1998-1999.

- Third, D03-100's testimony undermines key school reports for the 2002-2004 period. P-250 testified that he completed his third year at school in 2002, before he went with his family for their vacation to Bunia and then fled to Zombe in mid-August 2002 when Bunia fell to UPC forces.¹⁹² P-250 stated that he did not start his fourth year of schooling, which was in Gety, until UN Uruguayan peacekeepers arrived (namely in 2003).¹⁹³ In contrast, D-03-100 said that P-250 was doing his third year of secondary schooling at Kagaba in 2002¹⁹⁴ and claimed that P-250 completed his fourth year of studies at Kagaba-Gety in 2003.¹⁹⁵ However, both their testimonies contradict (a) the key school report EVD-D03-00008 upon which the Chamber relies, which instead purports that P-250 completed his third year of secondary school in 2003 (therefore after the Bogoro attack); and (b) school report EVD-D03-00009, which purports that P-250 completed his fourth year of secondary school in 2004.

¹⁹¹ There is also an unexplained loss of a school year 2000 to 2001 in the school records provided by Defence, as EVD-D03-0006 indicates a year of study from 1999 to 2000, whilst the next sequential school record (EVD-D03-0007) indicates a year of study from 2001 to 2002.

The Prosecution observes that the Uruguayan UN peacekeepers arrived in Ituri in May 2003. The Prosecution further observes that in Ituri the normal school year ran from September to early July each year.

113. The Chamber also failed to take into account evidence that there was no proper foundation laid for authenticating the school records through P-250:¹⁹⁶ (a) P-250 said in relation to two of the school reports that they were from Kagaba school, but did not agree that they were his reports;¹⁹⁷ (b) the years of the reports were not brought to his attention when they were shown to him;¹⁹⁸ and (c) he confirmed that he never requested these documents and never had them in his possession.¹⁹⁹ Moreover, Defence said that [REDACTED] would come and testify, so it was assumed he would authenticate them. The Chamber said when it admitted the reports into evidence that D03-100 when he testified could confirm whether they [REDACTED] and where they came from.²⁰⁰ However, D03-100 was never questioned about the reports by the Defence so did not confirm that the school reports [REDACTED].

(iii) Failure to consider evidence relevant to the reliability of Defence witnesses' testimony regarding P-250

114. When assessing the credibility of Defence witnesses and reliability of their accounts that P-250 was not a militiaman but was just a student, the Chamber failed to take into account essential relevant evidence and facts.

115. The Chamber acknowledged that D03-100 admitted that his family had been in conflict with the family of Ngudjolo because of [REDACTED] with the

And I see this report card which shows this school where I studied.” See EVD-D03-0007: P-250-T-105-ENG-p.66-ll.19- p.68-l.23: “That is correct. It is a report card from the Kagaba Institute”.

The Chamber when admitting the school reports into evidence noted that [REDACTED] were coming to testify and it would be possible to confirm their provenance and that they were the ones in possession of those documents.

Prosecution and that he decided to testify (for the defence) because Ngudjolo's family threatened his own family with death.²⁰¹ The Chamber indeed wondered whether the threats adversely affected D03-100's testimony²⁰² and asked the witness directly whether he had told the whole truth during his testimony.²⁰³ Notably, however, the witness refused to give a direct response to defence repeated questions as to whether his testimony that P-250 was not a combatant with Ngudjolo was unaffected by the conflict with Ngudjolo's family.²⁰⁴

116. Moreover, in finding that four other Defence witnesses supported D03-100's version that P-250 was not a militiaman, the Chamber failed to take into account the following relevant evidence and facts. As regards D03-66 and D03-55, the Chamber failed to consider its own finding in relation to these two Ngudjolo witnesses, on the issue of child soldiers, that they responded in "in the same near-rehearsed way" and that the Chamber concluded "that these witnesses were trying not to prejudice the accused." Bearing in mind the Chamber found P-250 was a key witness against Ngudjolo,²⁰⁵ it is not surprising that Ngudjolo's witnesses would suggest that he was a student and not a militiaman in 2002-2003. Even so, their testimony that they heard that P-250 was a student in Gety (rather than Kagaba) contradicts the school reports that P-250 was a student in Kagaba in 2002-2003.

117. The Chamber also relied on the testimony of two Katanga witnesses, D02-160 and D02-161,²⁰⁶ that P-250 was a student. The Chamber did not assess and presumably did not assume witness bias, presumably because the witnesses were not called by Ngudjolo. However, P-250 was also a key witness in the case against Germain Katanga,²⁰⁷ and thus it was clearly also in the interest of Katanga to discredit his evidence. The Chamber acknowledged in its Judgement that P-250 gave the following information relevant to Germain Katanga: P-250 testified that the Bedu-Ezekere delegation met with Katanga to discuss the upcoming Bogoro attack, after which the delegation returned to Zumbe with ammunition supplied by Katanga; that his FRPI troops jointly attacked Bogoro using communications provide by the FRPI and he saw Katanga (as well as Ngudjolo) after the attack receiving commanders' reports.²⁰⁸

118. Accordingly, the Chamber's rejection of P-250's evidence that Ngudjolo became the leader of the Bedu-Ezekere militia and that P-250 was a militiaman based in Zumbe is, from its own description, based on criteria that purported to be objective but were, on balance, unfairly skewed against the Prosecution. As the Chamber acknowledges, P-250 was a key witness, so its errors in assessing this witness materially impacted on its overall conclusion as to Ngudjolo's authority.

Other Prosecution Witnesses

119. The Chamber's failure to take into account relevant evidence and facts when assessing credibility was systemic and also affected other Prosecution witnesses. It would be excessive to list every single relevant fact or finding that the Chamber did not take into consideration, but the following examples further demonstrate the systematic nature of the error:

120. The Chamber found that P-28 contradicted himself as he first told the Prosecution that he arrived in Aveba after Katanga's wedding, but testified that he attended Katanga's wedding (making it unclear when he arrived in Aveba). However, the Chamber failed to consider (a) P-28 clarified that he arrived in Aveba after Katanga's engagement; (b) P-28's account of when he arrived in

²⁰⁸ Judgment, paras.131-134.

Aveba was supported by Defence witnesses, in particular D02-161 corroborated P-28's account that P-28 was in Aveba from September 2002; and (c) P-28 provided a detailed account regarding Katanga's trip from Aveba to Beni end of 2002, which was corroborated by Katanga and D03-88, indicating P-28's presence in Aveba at that time; and provided a detailed account regarding the Zumbe delegation's trip to Aveba before the Bogoro attack which was corroborated by P-250 and the Soap Letter.

121. The Chamber acknowledged that P-219 provided a detailed account of life in Aveba prior to the Bogoro attack but nonetheless relied largely on Defence witnesses to conclude that P-219 was not in Aveba prior to the Bogoro attack, but only after May 2003. In so doing, the Chamber failed to take into account the following evidence that corroborates that P-219 was present before the Bogoro attack and went there after the attack: first, P-219 did not contradict Defence witnesses but confirmed (i) that he moved together with his family to Aveba from Bunia in May 2003, and his family remained in Bunia from August 2002 to May 2003 when he left Bunia in August 2002; and (ii) P-219 did not state that he was permanently based in Aveba from August 2002, but instead said that from August 2002 until April 2004, he was often based in Aveba but would usually come and go. Second, he provided details regarding events after the attack, including the meeting of commanders under the mango trees by the UPC camp, corroborated by P-250 and P-28.²⁰⁹ Third, the Chamber rejected P-219's account of conversations that he had with Ngudjolo, Katanga, Commanders Bahati de Zumbe and Commander Yuda regarding the attack but failed to take into account relevant evidence corroborating those accounts, including as set out in paragraphs 122, 127 to 130 and 135 to 136 below; and the fact that several witnesses confirm Bahati and Yuda's participation in the attack, including Defence witnesses.

Second stage: fact-finding

A) Ngudjolo's admission to P-317

122. The Chamber found that P-317 was a credible witness²¹⁰ and that she had a conversation with Ngudjolo during which he admitted he had organized the attacks on Bogoro and Mandro and provided reasons.²¹¹ However, and as already advanced, when assessing the probative value of her evidence the Chamber found that Ngudjolo's statements were too general for the Chamber to make a finding, based on his own admission, as to his status and role within Bedu-Ezekere groupement,²¹² and also that it could not exclude the possibility that he had inflated his responsibility to augment his position should he later join the regular Congolese army.²¹³ The Chamber further noted that Ngudjolo's confession was inconsistent with a later admission to the Congolese public prosecutor, to whom he claimed only to have led the operation on Bunia of 6 March 2003.²¹⁴ Both prongs, separately and combined, reflect the Chamber's unfair and illogical analysis.

123. The Prosecution has addressed the significance of the Chamber's failure to apply the beyond reasonable doubt standard when it speculated as to alternative explanations for Ngudjolo to have confessed. But the decision to not give weight to Ngudjolo's confession also illustrates its failure to properly assess the probative value of evidence in its context. In particular:

²¹¹ Judgment, paras.292, 434, 497. P-317-T-228-p.44-1.9-18/T-228-ENG-p.51-1.22-p.52-1.5.

²¹² Judgment, paras.434, 451.

²¹³ Judgment, para.434.

²¹⁴ Judgment, para.497.

- The Chamber disregarded that even Ngudjolo did not claim he lied in order to bolster his stature, he denied having met P-317 and admitting that he organized the attack.²¹⁵
- The Chamber's conclusion that Ngudjolo may have been motivated to inflate his leadership role also failed to consider other evidence that established that he was already a known and recognized leader by then. Indeed, the Chamber elsewhere found that by 4 April 2003 (a) Ngudjolo was recognized as a person of authority by the UPDF (which requested his permission for the UN to access Bogoro²¹⁶ and invited him to key meetings such as the 6-11 March 2003 meeting),²¹⁷ senior UN officials involved in the peace process,²¹⁸ and others within the militia (including Commander Dark, in charge of Bogoro and the FNI President who nominated him to his role within the FNI-FRPI alliance);²¹⁹ (b) using the title "Colonel", he had signed, the 18 March 2003 peace agreement on behalf of the Lendu of Djugu community;²²⁰ (c) he was Chief of Staff (and deputy chief of staff of operations) of the FNI-FRPI alliance²²¹ and Commander of the FRPI division;²²² and (d) he was responsible for security in Bunia and all main roads in Ituri.²²³

124. Similarly, the Chamber's conclusion that Ngudjolo's admission to P-317 was not truthful because he did not also confess to the Bogoro and Mandro attacks in his admission to a Congolese public prosecutor²²⁴ failed to take into account that (a) P-317 was a UN human rights investigator investigating the particular attacks on Bogoro and Mandro,²²⁵ so in that context, it made sense for him to discuss those attacks with her; and (b) Ngudjolo's statement to a Congolese war crimes prosecutor that he "only led the 6 March 2003 operation on Bunia" was, in context, not an admission but an attempted denial, an acceptance of responsibility for what arguably was a legitimate battle albeit with collateral damage to civilians, while avoiding responsibility for other events that were reasonably viewed as war crimes (including attacks against civilians in Tchomia,²²⁶ by Lendu militia led by Ngudjolo²²⁷).

125. Finally, in yet another twist, the Chamber rejected Ngudjolo's admission to the Congolese Prosecutor, on the basis that Ngudjolo "seems to claim overall responsibility for the operation" when in fact it was a joint UPDF-Lendu operation.²²⁸ When reaching this conclusion, the Chamber failed to take into account the testimony of Defence witnesses that the UPDF and Lendu, although allied, maintained their separate groups. Ngudjolo's confession confirmed that he led the Lendu combatants,²²⁹ a fact also proved by other relevant evidence including evidence acknowledged by the Chamber, that several witnesses and the UN report stated that Lendu from Bedu-Ezekere participated in the operation and assisted the UPDF in ousting the UPC from Bunia.²³⁰ Defence witness D03-88 expressly confirmed that Ngudjolo participated in the 6 March 2003 Bunia

²²⁶ See EVD-OTP-00283. The public prosecutor first asked Ngudjolo about the July 2003 operation in Tchomia by forces of whom he was chief of staff; and when Ngudjolo denied any knowledge, he was asked if he was involved in any military operations to which he said he "only" led the Bunia operation of 6 March 2003.

operation,²³¹ contradicting Ngudjolo's denial of participation.²³² Additionally, shortly after the joint UPDF-Lendu Bunia operation, Ngudjolo was invited by UPDF General Kayihura to attend the 6-11 March 2003 meeting and was treated at that meeting as being a senior authority by both the UPDF and FRPI commander Dark.²³³

(ii) Ngudjolo organised the Bogoro/Mandro attacks and had authority to do so

126. The Chamber fails to consider key relevant evidence and facts that should have led it to conclude that Ngudjolo's admission to P-317 was accurate: he organized the attacks on Bogoro and Mandro,²³⁴ and had the authority to do so. In particular, the Chamber failed to consider its own factual findings and other corroborating evidence.

(a) Chamber's relevant factual findings

127. The Chamber first failed to take into account the following factual findings:

Bedu-Ezekere combatants attacked Bogoro and Mandro

128. First, the Chamber found that Lendu attackers from the Bedu-Ezekere groupement participated in the Bogoro attack.²³⁵ By the time of the Bogoro attack, the Bedu-Ezekere militia was not just a self-defence movement as Defence claimed,²³⁶ but were an organized group comprised of at least 500 Lendu combatants,²³⁷ which gathered at permanent positions under military commanders.²³⁸ Leaders of the Bedu-Ezekere committee did not lead the Lendu

Ngudjolo was the leader of the Bedu-Ezekere combatants

129. Second, the Chamber failed to assess P-317's evidence in light of the following factual findings that indicated that Ngudjolo was the leader of the Bedu-Ezekere combatants at the time of the Bogoro and Mandro attacks:

- By the end of 2002 Ngudjolo was already an important person within the Bedu-Ezekere groupement owing to his family's status in Ituri, his studies, and the military training he received.²⁴⁰ Before the Bogoro attack, he already had some military experience.²⁴¹ Further, nor would the fact that he was a nurse exclude his ability to have had a position of authority within the Bedu-Ezekere combatants.²⁴²
- Ngudjolo was dealing with many senior figures within Ituri, as a person of senior military rank. Indeed, the Chamber rejected Ngudjolo's claims that he obtained his rank of Colonel by chance or career opportunism, and was an imposter duping senior figures, such as Commander Dark (who led some of the forces at the Bogoro attack), UPDF General Kayihura (who was chief of the UPDF in Ituri and occupying force at the time), or senior members of MONUC involved in the pacification process.²⁴³ Ngudjolo's speeches in March 2003 indicated that he had an in-depth knowledge of what was happening in Ituri.²⁴⁴ The UPDF viewed him as a person of authority, as reflected, for instance, in their request addressed to him for permission for the UN to access Bogoro on 26 March 2003.²⁴⁵

- Shortly after the Bogoro attack, Ngudjolo attended the small 6-11 March 2003 meeting convened by the UPDF for those the UPDF considered could contribute to the peace process.²⁴⁶ The Chamber concluded that the fact that Ngudjolo attended in military uniform, introduced himself as a “military man”, was asked by UPDF General Kayihura to “remain on his territory”, and Commander Dark (responsible for attackers who remained in Bogoro after the attack)²⁴⁷ showed him deference, were “all signs of just how important the accused was at a date so close to the Bogoro battle.”²⁴⁸
- On 18 March 2003, Ngudjolo was one of four officials representing Lendu from Djugu territory (in which Bedu-Ezekere groupement is located),²⁴⁹ who signed the cessation of hostilities agreement. He signed as Colonel, which “showed he laid claim to and carried out duties associated with that rank”.²⁵⁰ It would have been odd indeed that he would sign, without any status, when individuals the Defence claimed led the Bedu-Ezekere militia instead of Ngudjolo and who were allegedly more senior than him, did not.²⁵¹ He also participated in meetings of the Ituri pacification commission and the comité de concertation des groupes armés in April 2003 in military uniform and signed the final report of the IPC on behalf of FNI-FRPI.²⁵²

- On 22 March 2003, he was appointed as Chief of staff (and deputy chief of staff of operations) of the FNI-FRPI alliance.²⁵³ The Chamber considered that his appointment within the alliance showed that FNI President (D03-11) recognised Ngudjolo as a person of real influence militarily as well as someone who was sufficiently capable to occupy the post.²⁵⁴ On 21 and 22 March 2003, Ngudjolo was invited to another meeting with UPDF General Kayihura, amongst other “Lendu leaders”, at which the General asked those “commanders” to “stop attacking the villages and to live in harmony with other ethnic groups.”²⁵⁵
- By the end of March 2003, in televised broadcasts Ngudjolo confirmed he was responsible for security in Bunia and along main roads, and gave orders to the commander at Bogoro to allow access to the town. He also stated that he was chief of staff and commander of the FRPI division, and introduced Dark as commander of Bogoro operations.²⁵⁶

(b) Other corroborating evidence

130. The Chamber also did not take into account the following relevant evidence to assess the probative value of Ngudjolo’s admission to P-317:

- First, and as dealt with in more detail below, the Chamber wrongly excluded from its consideration the testimony of several other witnesses who confirmed that Ngudjolo was the leader of the Bedu-Ezekere militia that attacked Bogoro, including: (a) Ngudjolo’s admission to P-219 that he responded to Katanga’s request for his Lendu forces to assist in attacking Bogoro;²⁵⁷ (b) Katanga's admission to P-12 and P-160 that he sought Ngudjolo's assistance for his Lendu forces to assist in attacking Bogoro;²⁵⁸ (c) Ngudjolo's admission to P-12 that he had killed many Hema (which indirectly supports the statement made by Ngudjolo to P-317 that no Hema were civilians, including women and children, as they were all armed);²⁵⁹ (c) P-28's evidence that Ngudjolo was the leader of the Zumbe forces that attacked Bogoro and Mandro, and his corroboration of P-250's account that Ngudjolo sent a Zumbe delegation to Aveba to plan the Bogoro attack;²⁶⁰ (d) other witnesses who stated Ngudjolo was the leader of the Lendu forces that attacked Bogoro, whose evidence was dismissed in turn as being of low probative value as hearsay, but again viewed only in isolation.²⁶¹

- Second, there were aspects of video evidence led at trial that were not relied upon by the Chamber in its assessment of the probative value of Ngudjolo's admission to P-317: first, according to that evidence, by late March 2003, when Ngudjolo introduced Dark as commander of Bogoro operations, he referred to him as his "opérateur", making it explicit that Dark was his subordinate;²⁶² second, when UPDF General told Ngudjolo at the 6-11 March 2003 meeting to remain in his territory, he did so after specifically referring to the attack at Bogoro (as well as two other places), and when denying UPDF involvement in ²⁵⁹ Judgment, para.436, 225-226. See also footnote 1019. The Chamber refers to P-12's mistake in dates as to when Ngudjolo made this admission to him. P-12 said the exchange with Ngudjolo occurred in May-June 2004, but this was when Ngudjolo was in detention. However, as the Prosecution explained although P-12 said the wrong year, he was accurately describing events that took place in 2005. Although P-12 said he met Ngudjolo in 2004, he clarified that his meeting with Ngudjolo took place the same year the MRC was created, which was in 2005. Ngudjolo confirmed the MRC was created in 2005. See ICC-01/04-01/07-3251-Conf-Corr, paras.496-498.

the Bogoro attack pointed towards Ngudjolo;²⁶³ third, Dark himself indirectly corroborated the truth of what Ngudjolo admitted to P-317 when he confirmed that Lendu-Ngiti forces attacked Bogoro²⁶⁴ and gave the same strategic reasons as Ngudjolo for the joint attack on Bogoro, namely to dislodge the UPC that was attacking their communities (and to ensure the Walendu-Tatsi/Walendu-Bindi allies could freely access one another).²⁶⁵

131. Third, and last, the Chamber failed to take into account, the testimony of several witnesses, the UN report, and video evidence of Dark's statements that confirm Bedu-Ezekere militia did attack Mandro.²⁶⁶

B) Exclusion of hearsay evidence

132. The Chamber wrongly excluded relevant evidence of six witnesses (including three Defence witnesses) who testified that Ngudjolo was the most senior military leader of the Lendu combatants that attacked Bogoro.²⁶⁷ The Chamber did not find that the six witnesses were lying regarding Ngudjolo's role, but Ngudjolo stated that he organised the attacks for strategic reasons referring to UPC bombardment of Lendu villages near Bogoro and the UPC military camp at Mandro.

accorded their evidence low probative value because it was hearsay and lacked detail regarding Ngudjolo's role. However, once more the Chamber assessed the testimony of each witness in isolation and without considering their testimony in light of the totality of evidence. The Chamber should have assessed whether and how their hearsay evidence was corroborated by other evidence before determining whether it was reliable, and then conclude what weight it could give to it. This is not, however, what the Chamber did.

133. For example, the Chamber wrongly rejected D02-176's evidence, that it was "well known" that Ngudjolo organized the Bogoro attack, as "anonymous hearsay", even though, as the Chamber acknowledged, he was not an uninformed bystander: he was a UPC Captain involved in the defence of Bogoro during the attack and had knowledge and expertise to identify the military commanders of enemy groups, especially as the UPC forces, including from Bogoro, had repeatedly attacked the Bedu-Ezekere groupement.²⁶⁸ The Chamber discounted the evidence of D02-176 and other "hearsay" witnesses, however, because they were not from Zumbe and also because they might have confused Ngudjolo's position at the time of the Bogoro attack with his later position within the FNI-FRPI alliance from 22 March 2003,²⁶⁹ yet another speculative finding with no identifiable support in the record.

134. The Chamber failed to assess their evidence in light of the totality of the relevant evidence and facts, including, inter alia, the following:

- D02-176 had direct knowledge of Bedu-Ezekere Lendu commanders, some of whom he went to school with in Bogoro.²⁷⁰ His UPC forces based at Bogoro also attacked Zumbe, before the Bogoro attack of 24 February 2003.²⁷¹

- In fact, Ngudjolo was widely regarded as a leader, including by member of his own forces, he was seen as a significant authority within Bedu-Ezekere by the end of 2002,²⁷² and shortly after the Bogoro attack he was shown on Ituri news as a senior military authority at critical meetings, was deferred to by Commander Dark, and signed the 18 March 2003 cessation of hostilities agreement on behalf of the Lendu of Djugu.
- The Chamber also failed to assess the core of D02-176's evidence (that it was well-known that Ngudjolo organized the Bogoro attack), in light of the following relevant evidence: Ngudjolo admitted to P-317 that he had organized the Bogoro and Mandro attacks.²⁷³ There was additional evidence confirming that Ngudjolo played a role in organizing the Bogoro attack including: his admission to P-219 that Katanga asked for his assistance; and a similar admission that Katanga made to P-12 and P-160 that he asked for Ngudjolo's assistance, for the attack.²⁷⁴ Moreover, by admitting to a Congolese public prosecutor that he led the Bunia operation of 6 March 2003, which included Lendu Bedu-Ezekere combatants involved in the Bogoro attack,²⁷⁵ Ngudjolo was admitting he had the ability to organize a key military operation just two weeks after the Bogoro attack.
- Ngudjolo's role in organizing the Bogoro attack is further evidenced by the fact that just two weeks later, FRPI Commander Dark (in charge of operations at Bogoro and the person responsible for the attackers that remained in Bogoro), showed him deference. Ngudjolo even referred to him as “mon opérateur” on 30 March 2003.²⁷⁶

- The Chamber said that because the ‘hearsay’ witnesses did not live in Zumbe it could not accord much probative value to their evidence that Ngudjolo was the leader of the Lendu combatants who attacked Bogoro. However, the Chamber failed to take into account that although not from Zumbe, all of the ‘hearsay’ witnesses lived in close proximity,²⁷⁷ and UPC Captain D02-176 and victim witnesses V-2 and V-4, like all Bogoro residents, had an interest in knowing who led their enemies.²⁷⁸ The Chamber found Lendu combatants had also attacked Bogoro in the past.²⁷⁹

C) Admissions to P-219, P-12 and P-160

135.P-219 testified that Ngudjolo admitted that Germain Katanga had asked him to assist in the attack at Bogoro. The Chamber rejected this. In so doing, it also refused to consider, for other reasons, evidence that corroborated P-219’s testimony, including that Katanga made similar statements about having sought Ngudjolo’s help, to P-12 and P-160,²⁸⁰ and that in fact the Ngiti needed support to take over Bogoro.²⁸¹ With respect to P-12 and P-160, it noted that because of their relationship [REDACTED], it could not exclude the possibility that they had colluded before coming to testify,²⁸² even in the absence of any actual indication that they concocted consistent false evidence and without considering that other evidence corroborated the testimony of [REDACTED] witnesses. And finally, the Chamber was unable to rely on the evidence that Katanga had sought Ngudjolo's help because Katanga testified and denied it, creating an irreconcilable conflict in accounts that made it impossible to find one version to be true beyond reasonable doubt.

136. Finally, P-12 testified that Ngudjolo admitted that he had killed many Hema. The Chamber discounted this evidence because as not relevant to Ngudjolo's authority and because it was "too vague and blurred".²⁸³ However, the Prosecution recalls that when asked by P-317 why so many civilians were killed at Bogoro and Mandro, Ngudjolo responded that no Hema were civilians, including women and children, as they were all armed.

Third stage: final assessment of all facts and evidence to determine guilt or innocence

137. The Chamber found Ngudjolo not guilty of all charges, because it was not satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that Ngudjolo was the leader of the Lendu combatants who participated in the attack on Bogoro on 24 February 2003.²⁸⁴ As a result of the errors described in the preceding section, the Chamber failed to take into consideration all the relevant evidence and its own factual findings. Its ultimate conclusion on the guilt or innocence of Ngudjolo was therefore vitiated by the legal and factual errors discussed above.

²⁸² Judgment, para.441.

²⁸³ Judgment, footnote 1019.

²⁸⁴ Judgment, para.503.

D. The error materially impacts on the Judgment

138. The Prosecution adduced examples of the Chamber's failure to consider the totality of evidence and facts when assessing key evidence and facts at the very heart of the case. Although the Chamber was not obliged to refer to every item of evidence, its reasons were not "responsive to the case's live issues and the parties' key arguments",²⁸⁵ in that the Chamber failed to consider key corroborative evidence or facts relevant to Ngudjolo's authority. This error impacted on its conclusion that it was not established beyond a reasonable doubt that Ngudjolo was the leader of the Lendu combatants who participated in the attack on Bogoro on 24 February 2003, which in turn led to its overall conclusion that Ngudjolo was not guilty of the crimes charged.²⁸⁶

139. If the Appeals Chamber agrees that the Trial Chamber erred in its truncated consideration of the evidence and its failure even to properly weigh the value of its own evidentiary findings, it must then conclude that the Chamber's Judgment is flawed and not reliable. As a consequence, it must annul and correct the findings included in the portions of the Judgment referred to above and assess the corrected findings in relation to the entirety of the evidence and in the context of other relevant factual findings entered by the Trial Chamber. This process would necessarily lead to a conclusion beyond a reasonable doubt that Ngudjolo was the leader of the Lendu fighters of the Bedu-Ezekere who attacked Bogoro on 24 February 2003.

²⁸⁵ R v JMH [2011] 3 R.C.S, para. 32: Although a Chamber is not required to refer to every item of evidence, citing Bonnie J. in R v Walker (2008 SCC 34, [2008], 2 S.C.R.245, para.20), Cromwell J observed: "reasons are sufficient if they are responsive to the case's live issues and the parties' key arguments. Their sufficiency should be measured not in the abstract, but as they respond to the substance of what was in issue." See also R v Rudge [2011] ONCA 791 (citing R v Walker, R v JMH), paras.56: "[A] trial judge is not required to record an assessment of every piece of evidence in his or her reasons... However, the reasons must be responsive to the case's live issues and the parties' key arguments".

F. RELIEF SOUGHT

227. As demonstrated above, the Trial Chamber made significant legal, factual and procedural errors vitiating the Decision. The Prosecution further submits that, in relation to the Ngudjolo's position of authority, the only reasonable conclusion based on the evidence and factual findings described above is that Ngudjolo was the leader of the Lendu combatants of the Bedu-Ezekere groupement who attacked Bogoro on 24 February 2003.

228. Article 83(2) provides that the Appeals Chamber may "reverse or amend the decision ... or ... order a new trial before a different Trial Chamber".

229. When amending the decision, the Appeals Chamber may enter findings of law or of fact, applying the appropriate standard of review.⁵⁰¹ The Appeals Chamber confirmed its fact-finding powers,⁵⁰² consistent with Article 83(1), which states that “the Appeals Chamber shall have all the powers of the Trial Chamber”.

230. To remand a case for re-trial is a discretionary decision of the Appeal Chamber, for which the circumstances of the case as well as the interests of justice should be taken into consideration.⁵⁰³ The Appeals Chamber may also remand the case for a partial re-trial,⁵⁰⁴ in relation to which the Appeals Chamber has the power to determine the scope.⁵⁰⁵

231. In relation to the First Ground of Appeal, the Prosecution requests the Appeals Chamber, pursuant to Article 83, to:

- a) find that the Trial Chamber incorrectly applied the standard of proof under Article 66(3) to establish the facts of the case;
- b) reverse the Judgment;
- c) find that no reasonable trier of fact could, on the basis of the evidence before the Chamber, have concluded that Ngudjolo was not the leader of the Lendu combatants of the Bedu-Ezekere groupement who attacked Bogoro on 24 February 2003, apply the correct standard of proof and enter a factual finding that Ngudjolo was the leader of the Lendu combatants of the Bedu-Ezekere groupement who attacked Bogoro on 24 February 2003; and
- d) remand the case for a re-trial before a different Trial Chamber in order for it to enter the necessary factual and legal findings on the charges other than Ngudjolo’s position of authority or, if the Appeals Chamber rejects the

Prosecution's request for a factual finding, on all elements of the charges. The Prosecution further requests that the Appeals Chamber instruct the new Trial Chamber to make full use for the purposes of the re-trial of the existing record, including by resorting to Rule 68 and Rule 69, where appropriate.

232. In relation to the Second Ground of Appeal, the Prosecution requests the Appeals Chamber, pursuant to Article 83, to:

- a) find that the Trial Chamber erred by failing to take into consideration the totality of the evidence and its own factual findings during the three stages of decision-making;
- b) reverse the Judgment;
- c) find that on the basis of the totality of the evidence and bearing in mind the Chamber's factual findings, no reasonable trier of fact could have concluded that Ngudjolo was not the leader of the Lendu combatants of the Bedu-Ezekere groupement who attacked Bogoro on 24 February 2003, take into consideration the totality of the evidence referred to in the Prosecution's Document in Support of the Appeal and all the factual findings of the Trial Chamber, and enter a factual finding that Ngudjolo was the leader of the Lendu combatants of the Bedu-Ezekere groupement who attacked Bogoro on 24 February 2003;
- d) remand the case for a re-trial before a different Trial Chamber in order for it to enter the necessary factual and legal findings on the charges other than Ngudjolo's position of authority or, if the Appeals Chamber rejects the Prosecution's request for a factual finding, on all elements of the charges, with the same instruction as to the modalities of the re-trial requested above.

233. In relation to the Third Ground of Appeal, the Prosecution requests the Appeals Chamber, pursuant to Article 83, to:

- a) find that the Trial Chamber infringed on the Prosecution's right to a fair trial under Article 64(2);
- b) reverse the Judgment;
- c) [REDACTED]
- d) if the Appeals Chamber has allowed the First and or Second Ground of Appeal, and accepted the request for a factual finding, remand the case for a re-trial before a different Trial Chamber in order for it to enter the necessary factual and legal findings on the charges other than Ngudjolo's position of authority, with the instruction that the Trial Chamber make full use of the existing record, including by resorting to Rule 68 and Rule 69, where appropriate. Or, if neither the First and Second Ground have been allowed or the request for a factual finding made therein has not been accepted, to remand for a re-trial on all elements of the charges, with the same instruction as to the modalities of the re-trial requested above.
